"Upon the farmers of this country, therefore, in large measure, rests the fate of the war and the fate of the nations. May the nation not count upon them to omit no step that will increase the production of their land or that will bring about the most effectual co-operation in the sale and distribution of their products?

"The time is short. It is of the most imperative importance that everything possible be done and done immediately to make sure of large harvests. I call upon young men and old alike and upon the able-bodied boys of the land to accept and act upon this duty—to turn in hosts to the farms and make certain that no pains and no labor is lacking in this great matter.

"I particularly appeal to the farmers of the South to plant abundant foodstuffs as well as cotton.

Trade to Be Unhampered.

"The course of trade shall be as unhampered as it is possible to make it, and there shall be no unwarranted manipulation of the nation's food supply by those who handle it on its way to the consumer.

"This let me say to the middlemen of every sort, whether they are handling our foodstuffs or our raw materials of manufacture or the products of our mills and factories: The eyes of the country will be especially upon you. This is your opportunity for signal service, efficient and disinterested. The country expects you, as it expects all others, to forego unusual profits, to organize and expedite shipments of supplies of every kind, but especially of food, with an eye to the service you are rendering and in the spirit of those who enlist in the ranks, for their people, not for themselves.

"I shall confidently expect you to deserve and win the confidence of people of every sort and station.

Efficiency on Railroads.

"To the men who run the railways of the country, whether they be managers or operative employees, let me say that the railways are the arteries of the nation's life, and that upon them rests the immense responsibility of seeing to it that those arteries suffer no obstruction of any kind, no inefficiency or slackened power.

"To the merchant let me suggest the motto, 'Small profits and quick service,' and to the shipbuilder the thought that the life of the war depends upon him. The food and the war supplies must be carried across the seas no matter how many ships are sent to the bottom. The places of those that go down must be supplied at once.

"To the miner let me say that he stands where the farmer does: The work of the world waits on him. If he slackens or fails, armies and statesmen are helpless. He also is enlisted in the great Service army.

Every Garden Helps.

"Let me suggest also that every one who creates or cultivates a garden helps, and helps greatly, to solve the problem of the feeding of the nations; and that every housewife who practices strict economy puts herself in the ranks of those who serve the nation.

"This is the time for America to correct her unpardonable fault of wastefulness and extravagance. Let every man and every woman assume the duty of careful, provident use and expenditure as a public duty, as a dictate of patriotism which no one can now expect ever to be excused or forgiven for ignoring.

"In the hope that this statement of the needs of the nation and of the world in this hour of supreme crisis may stimulate those to whom it comes and remind all who need reminder of the solemn duties of a time such as the world has never seen before, I beg that all editors and publishers everywhere will give as prominent publication and as wide circulation as possible to this appeal.

Supreme Test Has Come.

"I venture to suggest also to all advertising agencies that they would perhaps render a very substantial and timely service to the country if they would give it widespread repetition. And I hope that clergymen will not think the theme of it an unworthy or inappropriate subject of comment and homily from their pulpits.

"The supreme test of the nation has come. We must all speak, act and serve together.

"WOODROW WILSON."

FRENCH CHURCHES IN RUINS

Tombs Are Rifled and Sacred Things Are Defiled by the German Troops.

London.—The correspondent of the Times with the British army in France telegraphs the following description of the desecration of a French church by the Germans before they retreated:

"Though the Germans left in a hurry, they had time enough to wreak their hatred on the church, to rifle the tombs. Slabs had been lifted bodily from the graves, not by an explosion but by human hands. The graves are empty. What was the ghoulish motive? Was it for the sake of the lead in which the bodies were incased? I may have been, or else mere spite against all sacred things which found full vent in the wreckage of the church.

Churches reduced to ruins by gunfire are a pitiable sight, but one to which we become accustomed here.

GAME FISHING

by

DIXIE CARROLL

Author of LAKE and STREAM GAME FISHING

BASS IN STREAMS.

My Dear Buck: There are many reasons for giving the black bass the title of "gamest fish of fresh water." For his size and weight he puts up as snappy a fight as any fisherman could wish for. Take a small-mouth bass in a swift-running stream and it will be a case of matching your knowledge of the fishing game with his keenly developed instinct, and at that, you have to keep your eyes open or he will slip one over on you and break for other waters.

As to main strength the bass, for its size, carries a larger package of that stuff than any other fish. Often when hooked it will plunge to the bottom and stick there to a fare-you-well. Nothing can budge him except your strength against his husky muscular development, and this puts a heavy strain on your tackle that often shows up a weak point in your equipment and it's "good-by" bass. At times you will think that the bass has edged into a rocky crevice and has propped his strong fins against the sides to give him leverage, and believe me he has sense enough to do it. He is wise enough to dart around submerged rocks and saw a line or gut leader on the ragged edges and make his getaway.

One of His Many Tricks.

One of his stock tricks is to watch your line and the moment he gets a little slack, up out of the water he jumps and gives a shake that would make a fair-sized "muskie" turn green with envy. This is not merely a shake of the head as practiced by other game fish, but a strong jerky shake that brings into play all the muscles of his body. He does not stop at one jump, but will leap repeatedly into the air, each time giving a master shake of his husky body. After the first leap you may think you have lost him and start reeling in, when 20 feet away from his first flop up he comes again. This is his method of showing an amateur how a well developed bass loosens a hook from his mouth, and unless you reel in that slack mighty quick, Buck, he will sure show you.

On His Way Up-Stream.

The bass is always on the move upstream, which is likely caused by the scarcity of natural food in the lower waters. He has no love for rapids or riffles and is seldom if ever found in them, but in the quieter waters at the lower end of a rapids or in the eddies on either side he is right at home. Although he does not like the rougher, swifter waters of the rapids and riffles, he will often dash into their frothy edge in pursuit of minnows, returning at once to the quieter water. The bass will also dash into very shallow water after some of the small fry, often in water so low that his dorsal fin will be entirely out of the water, returning, however, instantly to the deeper water with his catch. In his up-stream migration he will often loaf in pools below the rougher shallower water of the riffles until rainy weather raises the water, making swimming better for him. Right after high water makes poor fishing in most cases, as the bass have gone up stream to new localities and the new feeding grounds are generally alive with eats carried down by the current and this gives him a period of easy feeding. As a rule the bass do most of their feeding in the shallows or below riffles, going to the deep pools for rest and digestion of his overfilled feedbag, at which time it is very difficult to coax him with any lure or bait.

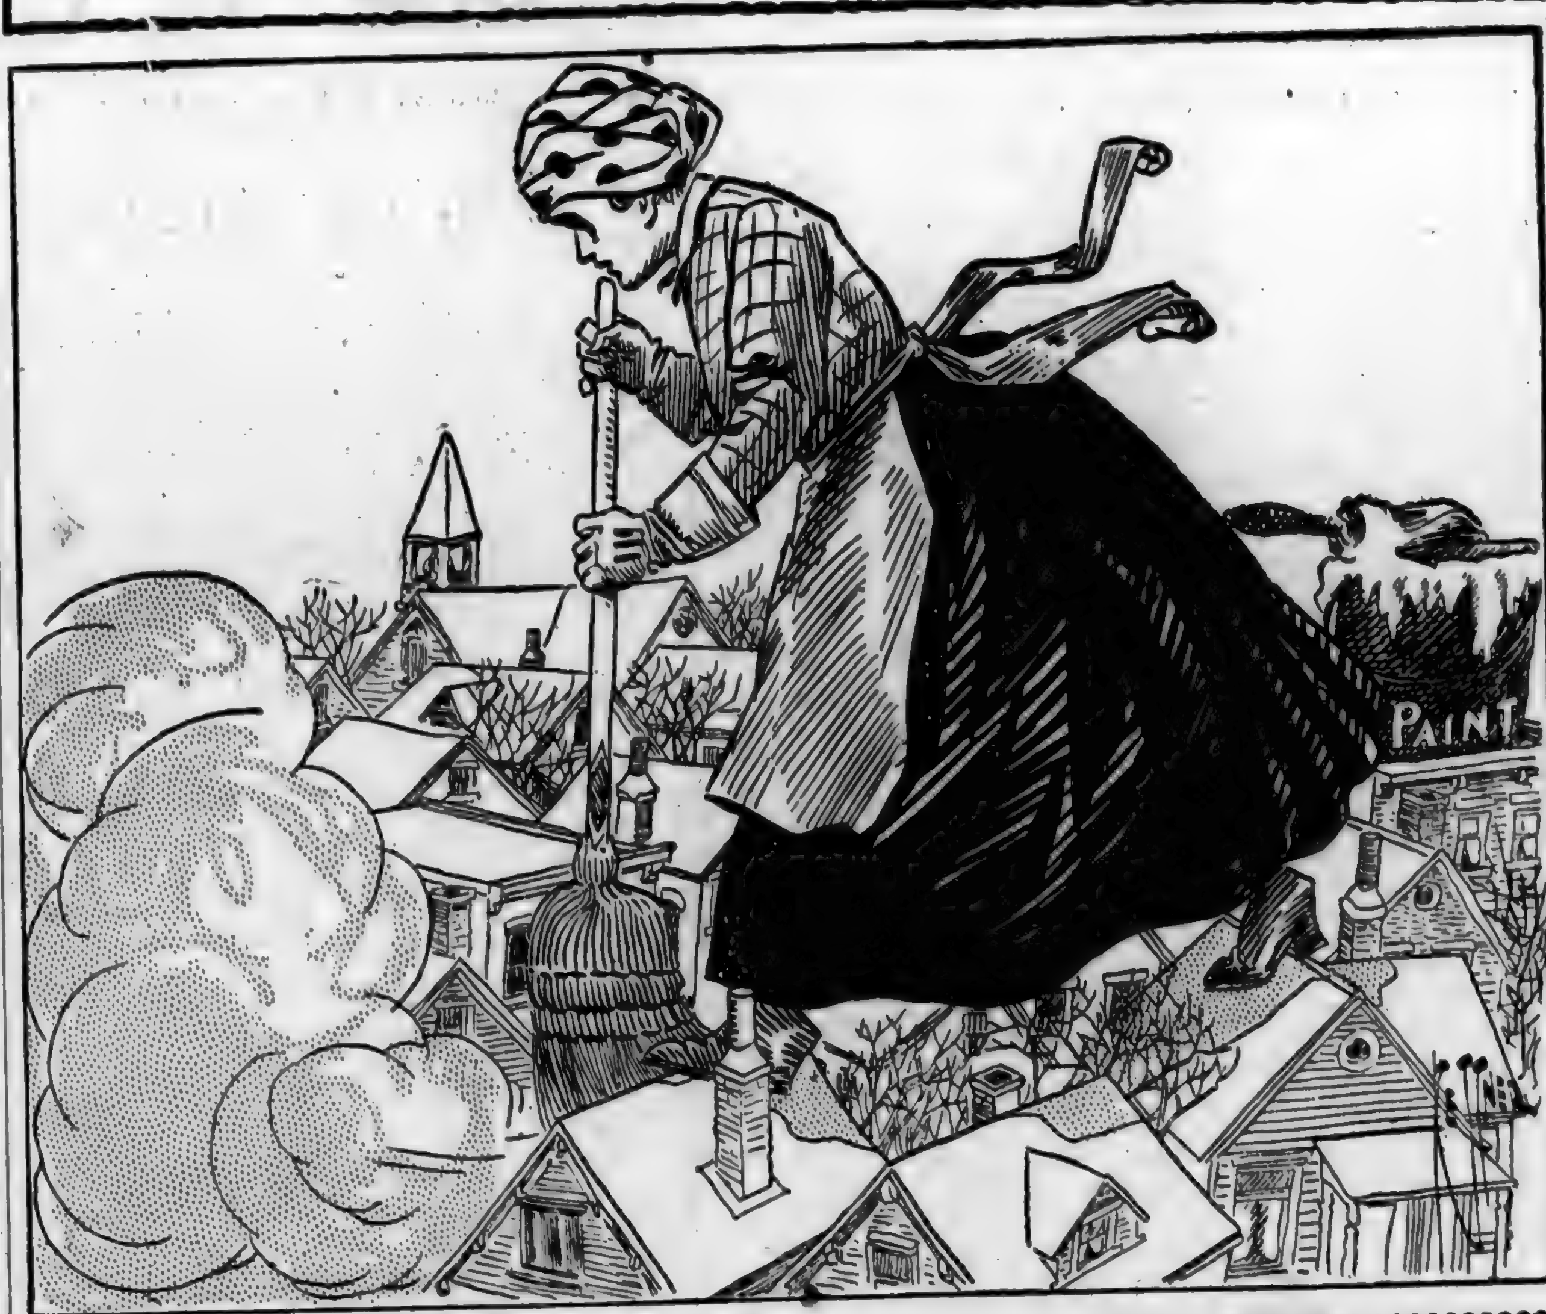
Sports in the Moonlight.

On a moonlight night the bass can be seen jumping up out of the water, having a general good time, just like a bunch of kids in the old "swimmin' hole." They are good night feeders and are generally close to the surface at that time. That they come to the surface at night was shown to me in a striking manner a few years ago. While frogging one night above a riffles in the Mahoning river in eastern Ohio I was slowly rowing across the river when something flopped into the boat behind me. After a few excited moments of considerable activity the flopper proved to be a 3¾-pound largemouth bass, and the following night in practically the same spot, a bass, larger by half a pound, flopped into the boat while the wife was piloting a bunch of suffragettes on a hunt for a mess of frogs. Later I fished this stretch of water with a moonlight mascot wobbler and caught quite a few strings of fine bass, particularly fine I thought for such "civilized" waters.

Bass fishing in the streams, rivers and lakes will be better each year, as the steady stocking of all civilized waters and the rapid increase of the fish as well as the adaptability of the largemouth to all waters means good bass fishing, which is a keen sport for anyone.

DIXIE.

SHE'LL MAKE A GOOD JOB OF IT, TOO!



WHY LIVE IN DIRTY TOWN?

I have in mind two towns.

Entering one, the railroad runs between two rows of dirty back yards, filled with tin cans and rubbish.

Entering the other, it passes houses neatly painted, back yards with flowers in them, and streets swept clean.

These two towns had the same population five years ago.

But recently two new factories have moved to one of them; real estate values have advanced; new houses are being built; everybody is prosperous and happy.

And the residents of the other town cannot understand their "bad luck."

This year 6,000 cities and towns in the United States will set aside one week as a clean-up and paint-up week.

The greatest miracles of modern times have been performed with bonfires, drain-pipes, soap, and paint.

The Philippines have been made a healthier place to live in than the average American town.

Typhoid has been stamped out of Serbia.

The Panama canal zone has been transformed from a dismal, unhealthy swamp to a wholesome place for homes.

The French, with a force of 110,000, lost 22,000 lives in their effort to build the canal; our deaths were 4,000 out of an average force of 32,000.

Our record there was nothing short of miraculous—and a clean-up campaign did it.

Last year Cleveland, in its Clean-Up and Paint-Up week, disposed of refuse sufficient to fill a train three and one-half miles long.

Another middle western town gathered its boys together, and, by offering a reward for each 100 tin cans, abolished its unsightly back yards in a single day.

"Help us Clean Up Philadelphia," was the slogan that banished the dirt in that city.

"Don't let your good cigar start a bad fire," was one of Rochester's battle cries.

A Clean-Up and Paint-Up week means less sickness, fewer fires, better children, and higher property values.

There was once an old Roman named Crassus. He trained a band of slaves to be firemen, masons, and painters. Then he made it his business to buy up houses on fire, and put the fire out. Also he bought houses that needed painting and painted them.

And his houses increased so much in value that he became the richest man in Rome.

"There is no better test of the civilization of a community than this: How much paint does it use?"

A wise man said that.

It is not given to you to found a religion or make a great invention or discover a new continent.

But you can make your town a cleaner, better place to live in.

And by so doing you give a little push to the Chariot of Civilization.

You become, in a small but important way, a co-worker with Prometheus and Socrates and Plato and Franklin and Watt and Edison and even Providence itself.—Bruce Barton, in "Every Week."

STAY AT IT!

The Kewaunee (Wis.) Enterprise editor says: "It will soon be time to 'clean up and paint up.' And while we are about it let's clean up, paint up, and stay up. To spend a few hours and a few dollars on your yard and property this spring and then forget all about it for the next five years to come is the poorest kind of economy."

BILL RUNS AMUCK!

By Judd Lewis in Houston Post

Bill Beezer got a can of paint and said in language queer and quaint, "By jing, before I put this down I'd like to paint the hull derned town! I just ain't got no better sense than to spread paint on every fence, if I could do it, and by gum, I guess that would be going some! And I would paint the house white, and all the chimneys red! I'd write my name on this here dingy town today before the sun went down, and make the hull place look brand new, if I could that is what I'd do! Just one good brush, and some good paint, makes a place look what it ain't; it covers up the bad spots and improves a place to beat the band!" Bill Beezer said in language quaint, then he got busy with his paint; he painted fences front and back, he painted up the servants' shack, he painted up the wash house, too, gave the woodshed a coating new, daubed paint upon the chicken coop, each place a man could climb or stoop Bill climbed and stooped, and spread a coat of paint that got his neighbor's goat. And so his neighbor got a can and painted his shack like a man, and then his next-door neighbor got some paint and got to work, and what Bill Beezer started spread so fast, and spread so far, that at the last the whole derned town which had looked mean was painted and looked fresh and clean. And when Bill put his bucket down he had put paint on the whole town. He had done wonders with his can. I hope you're a Bill Beezer man.

THE DEAD ONE

The bane of any community is the citizen who lacks even a semblance of interest in the community welfare. And, strange as it may seem in a democracy, absence of this interest seems to be pretty generally prevalent in the average American community today.

The "clean-up and paint-up" campaign is a most potent combatant of slothful citizenry. First, the campaign arouses the desire in men, women and children for homes and home town beautiful, sanitary and safe. Second, it impresses on all the fact that cleanliness, thrift and civic pride are the essentials by which they may satisfy that desire. Third, the campaign gives all something worth while and definite to do with their hands and feet and heads for the community good. And fourth, the campaign's educational influence and continuous activity helps steadily the year around, and year after year in eliminating many objectionable conditions caused formerly by thoughtlessness and carelessness.

THE VALUE OF PAINT

Paint, as has often been said, serves more than the mere purpose of decoration. Its principal value lies in the fact that it prolongs the life of the surfaces painted. Wood and iron, on exposure to the air, undergo a slow process of oxidation which just as surely destroys them as though they were set on fire, the difference being the speed at which the reactions occur. We take out insurance to cover loss by fire and should just as surely put on paint to cover loss by decay. It takes very little calculation to discover the apparently astounding fact that the loss through lack of painting is greater than the loss by fire. When the property owner comes to a full realization of the true reason for painting there will be no need for public-spirited people to back up a national campaign for such purposes.

CLEAN UP AND PAINT UP NOW

There is no need to go into arguments in favor of a clean community. No right-minded citizen wants to live in a place which is not clean and sanitary. A clean town insures health, health brings happiness and prosperity. The trouble is that many of us live in dirty, unsanitary towns, and either do not know it or are indifferent. Even the fact that we cannot keep ourselves personally clean or our houses clean unless the city as a whole is in a sanitary condition, fails to drive home our responsibility. This is where the clean up campaign justifies itself. It makes dirt apparent. It makes each citizen responsible. It makes cleanliness contagious. There is a saying: "If you want to keep a man out of the mud, black his boots." The clean up campaign acts as a community bootblacking.

One of our magazines has been interested in promoting year-round clean-up campaigns, and to further this cause has been offering prizes for letters on the subject. One small boy concluded his letter as follows: "When a fellow has a clean home and a clean yard and clean parents, it seems as if all the dirt there is stares him in the face; anyway he always sees dirt and disorder when there is any." That is more than half the battle, to see the dirt and disorder and to have it make one uncomfortable.

For a number of years sometime in April or May clean-up campaigns have had an annual sporadic appearance in towns and cities throughout the country. It is only recently that municipal housecleaning has become a national spring fashion. It can truthfully be termed a national fashion for it is estimated that last spring 2,500 cities and towns conducted their own campaigns against dirt and filth. This year more than 6,000 communities will be at it. In some states the fashion is dignified by a governor's proclamation, setting aside a day or a week for the ceremony. In some places the mayor issues a proclamation calling the citizens to brooms, shovels, and paint brushes upon a given date. There is no doubt that the sanction of a governor or a mayor produces a campaign which bears the best results. But many a commercial or civic club, woman's club or art society has put a city or village through a cleansing process which has left it more attractive and self respecting than it ever was before.

It really makes little difference who takes the initiative, but it is of great importance that everyone in the town should become vitally interested not only in making the place clean on a certain date but in keeping it so for all time.

Recipes for model campaigns have appeared upon the market in surprising numbers. There have been campaigns for an isolated farm, for a small town or village, for cities small and large. In describing a model campaign, it is impossible to find one that will be applicable to all conditions. In every case the general directions must be made to fit local needs.

At the outset it is only fair to recognize the fact that the majority of citizens too often expect officials to keep the town clean while the public is absolutely lacking in individual responsibility.

At first sight it might seem that a clean up and paint up campaign is conducted chiefly as a benefit performance for the hardware, paint, and lumber trades. A little thought will show that to produce cleaner surroundings both inside and outside the home, not only tradesmen of all kinds but every citizen of the town is incalculably benefited.—E. S. Koelker.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 29

JESUS WELCOMED AS KING.

LESSON TEXT—John 12:12-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord—John 12:13.

This lesson marks the beginning of that last tragic week in the life of our Lord, the most important week in all history since creation. The date was probably April 1, A. D. 30.

I. The Lesson of His Kinship. (vv. 12-16). Reading carefully the record of each evangelist, regarding this triumphal entry, we are still at a loss fully to describe the scene. It occurred the day following the supper in the home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus, i. e. on the Jewish Sabbath. From Bethphage Jesus sent two of his disciples into Jerusalem to secure the colt. They were to loose him without asking anyone's permission, and bring the ass and her colt to him to whom all things belong, with no other explanation than, "The Lord hath need of them" (Matt. 21:3). This command was in line with the prophecy (Zech. 9:9). The young ass was a symbol of peace, but the going of the disciples, in obedience to his command, was an act of faith, and obedience is the supreme test of discipleship (John 15:14). In response to their faith, they found everything just as he said it would be (Luke 19:32). Placing their garments upon the colt (Matt. 21:7) Jesus rode upon it toward the city, the people crying, "Hosanna"—literally, "Save, I beseech" (Ps. 19:37-40; see Luke 19:38; Mk. 11:9-10; Matt. 21:9). The enthusiasm of the moment was tremendous. For the moment this great crowd (Mk. 11:8) believed that Jesus was really the Messiah, threw the garments of their holiday attire in his way (Matt. 21:8), and cast their palm branches before him. The Pharisees protested (Luke 19:39-40), but the enemies of Jesus for the moment were impotent (John 12:19). The Pharisees forgot their dignity to such an extent as to get excited along with the multitude, though with another purpose (See Luke 19:37-40). Unfortunately the enthusiasm of the people was not long-lived. Many of the same ones were soon crying, "Crucify him" (Ch. 19:14-15). Jesus himself did not join in the general joy (Luke 19:41-44), for he, with prophetic eye, saw the outcome (Luke 19:41-44).

II. The Lesson of Reverence (vv. 17-19.) It is one thing to acknowledge Jesus as a King. It is quite another to revere him as Lord and Savior. Never was there a time when we need more to have reverence for things holy and for constituted authority than the present day. The act of reverence on the part of this multitude for the God-anointed King ought to be a suggestion to those who look upon Jesus merely as a man.

Ride triumphantly:
Behold we lay
Our lusts and proud wills in Thy way.

Jesus' grief is in strange contrast with the joy of the multitude. The practical application for us today is: "Have we cast our talents before him, God's rightfully anointed King?" There had been a large company of people present when Jesus was at the tomb of Lazarus, and raised him from the dead. The testimony of these eyewitnesses to the power of Jesus must have had great weight with the multitude. The enthusiasm of this crowd for Jesus excited the hatred of the Pharisees, making it all the more intense, for they saw the crowd forsaking them, and following one whom they envied and hated. To one another they exclaimed, "Behold, how ye prevail nothing." Notice the personal pronoun "ye," seeking to lay the fault upon others rather than taking their own share of the burden, another touch of human nature which is evident even today.

III. The Lesson of the Greek Pilgrims (vv. 20-26). These Greeks came first to Philip, who himself was a Greek. The hour had come (v. 23) when the work of Jesus for the Jews was to be finished. The Jews had been threatened with Greek religion, and that assault had been stopped by the Pharisees. Christ came first to the Jews that through them he might reach the Gentiles. Now his work for the Jews is done. He rejoices as he sees the Greeks coming to him, for it was to be in Greek dress and in Greek form of expression that Christianity was to conquer the world. But this rejoicing is tinged with sorrow, for it was a prophecy of the price that he must pay for the redemption of the world.

The Son of Man was glorified by his death; he was glorified by his reception on the part of the Gentiles; he was glorified by the approval of the Father.

Verse 24 expresses one of the most tremendous facts in the life of Jesus (Cf. I Cor. 15:36).

Think of the rich fruits of Christ's death, the countless lives that he reached and ennobled, and the effect of his life on the practical affairs of the world, the hospitals and every movement for the advancement and the well-being of mankind which can be traced to the influence of his life.

BIG RUSH NOW ON

For Western Canada and the 160-Acre Homesteads.

"In a war like this, they also serve and serve effectively who till the fields and gardens.

"It cannot be repeated too often that the world needs every ounce of food it can produce this year, and that the growers of that food are sure of good prices. When men now of middle age were casting their first ballot, 'dollar wheat' was the farmer's ideal of prosperity. Today, we have two-dollar wheat, with other, grains and meats and vegetables in proportion; and indications that any shift from these prices is as likely to be up as down.

"Every acre must work. The farmer who increases his crops is performing a national service, as well as assuring prosperity for himself. There cannot be too much, and unless a united and consistent effort is made, there will not be enough."—Chicago Journal.

Now that the United States has joined with the Allies, the sentiment of the past has merged into the personal interest of the present. The duty of the loyal and patriotic citizen is to bend every effort to bring the great World's War to a satisfactory conclusion, to assist in all ways the forces that have been fighting at tremendous odds the giant power of autocracy. Victory is now assured; the union of the great fighting force of the United States navy, its military, its financial co-operation, its full and complete sympathy, will eventually bring about a peace that will be solid and lasting. Canada, just across the border line, that has no mark of fortification, no signs of defense, welcomes the assistance that the United States is rendering, welcomes this new partner into the arena that is battling for a disruption of the forces that breed and beget tyranny and oppression, and fighting for a democratic and free world. What a sight it will be to see the American and the Canadian, with the Stars and Stripes and the Maple Leaf of Canada emblazoned in one fold and entwined in their effort to rid the world of an incubus that has disregarded all laws—human and divine.

There is a necessity for the greatest effort ever was made, not only on the battlefields of Europe, not only on the mined and submarined seas, but in carrying out on the peaceful fields of agriculture, the plans so urgently requested by those at the head of the departments of resources. The recent reports by the Government show a great falling off in the amount of grain that may be expected from the crop as of recent date, being only a little over 60 per cent, 16 per cent less than the average. Every patriotic American will bend all his effort towards increasing this. He may not shoulder a musket, but he can handle a hoe, he can drive a team and manage a plow. He will be doing yeoman service in this way, and assist in a wonderful manner the man who is fighting in the trenches. If he does not now own a piece of land, by all means get one—rent it, buy it—get it. There is lot of vacant land that will give ample return for his labor.

The desire to possess a home, to improve it and to prosper, is natural to every American, and today unprecedented offers are being made to secure the residence of the home-hunter. The war condition is draining the continent of its foodstuffs and economists are endeavoring to meet the rapid depletion of the nation's stores of grain and other farm products. Western Canada has proven her claim to being the natural producer of economically grown foodstuffs and is endeavoring to overcome a world's shortage in necessities by offering her lands, practically free, to anyone who will take them and produce. Labor is scarce in Canada, and is now being bonused. Good wages are offered and the time a farm hand is drawing pay in 1917, is considered by the Canadian Government, the same as residence duties on one of the free 160-acre farms, that this Government is giving away, in order to settle the fertile prairies and bring about within a few years a half billion annual crop of wheat.

The most conclusive evidence is available to any inquirer, that Western Canada farm lands will produce more wheat of a better quality and at a lower cost of production per acre than has heretofore been known in grain-growing countries. It is no idle statement to say, that yields of fifty bushels to the acre of wheat are grown in Canada; the statement is made in all seriousness and is backed up by the letters and affidavits of reliable farmers in Western Canada. These farmers are enjoying the same home comforts that their neighbors to the south participate; they have the same good houses, the same good horses and cattle, the same good roads and communication, as well as the same good social conditions, and, best of all, they own their land and what they earn they own for themselves, being a foundation for greater wealth and independence.—Advertisement.

Of course it is absent-mindedness when you forget, but it's gross neglect when your wife forgets.

Henry Shook Breaks Arm

Henry, the 10-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. B. O. Shook, broke both bones of the lower right arm near the wrist at noon on Tuesday. The boy took a bottle of medicine to the bank for F. R. Bowman, going in his father's auto. In cranking up the machine preparatory to returning, the engine kicked and the crank caught the lad on the arm. The fracture is serious, being of a diagonal nature.

Two Townships Organized.

Newville and Spencer Townships are to the fore with organizations looking to increased production of farm products, food conservation and the betterment of farm life. The farmers of Newville township met at Newville Center, Friday evening, as per the call in last weeks News, and organized by electing Guy Platter, president, and Andrew Chapman, secretary. It is proposed to organize three clubs in the township similar to those now in existance in Concord. Spencer was organized Saturday evening and there John Ulm was chosen president and Clyde Hart, secretary. Spencer will have two clubs, one at Spencerville and one at Coburntown.

Now is the time to get busy and do your mite toward supporting the government in its effort to secure a larger food production. Through these clubs the County Agent can work more effectually, and, Mr. Farmer, it is up to you to get some benefit from your county agent. Do not forget to prepare now to get some of the premiums at the Fall Exhibit at Auburn. The farmers will put on the show themselves this year. Get ready now to make the display of this section the very best in the county.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

WITH WONDERFUL ANIMAL INSTINCT, KAZAN SENSES DEATH NEAR HIM, AND LOVING JOAN, DECIDES TO STAY BY HER TEMPORARILY

Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves the life of Thorpe, his master, and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even Thorpe is afraid to touch Kazan, but Isobel, the dog's new mistress, wins his affection at once. On the way northward McCready, a dog-team driver, joins the party and the following night beats the master insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan kills McCready, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader, takes a young mate, Gray Wolf, and a few nights later drives off the pack which had attacked human beings and protects a sick man, his daughter, Joan, and her baby. Won by their kindness the wolf-dog submits to adoption by Joan.

Pierre knelt beside her. He was proffering something, and Kazan smelled meat. But it was the girl's hand that made him tremble and shiver, and when she drew back, urging him to follow her, he dragged himself painfully a foot or two through the snow. Not until then did the girl see his mangled leg. In an instant she had forgotten all caution, and was down close at his side.

"He can't walk," she cried, a sudden tremble in her voice. "Look, mon pere! Here is a terrible cut. We must carry him."

"I guessed that much," replied Radisson. "For that reason I brought the blanket. Mon Dieu, listen to that!"

From the darkness of the forest there came a low wailing cry.

Kazan lifted his head and a trembling whine answered in his throat. It was Gray Wolf calling to him.

It was a miracle that Pierre Radisson should put the blanket about Kazan, and carry him in to the camp, without scratch or bite. It was this miracle that he achieved, with Joan's arm resting on Kazan's shaggy neck as she held one end of the blanket. They laid him down close to the fire, and after a little it was the man again who brought warm water and washed away the blood from the torn leg, and then put something on it that was soft and warm and soothing, and finally bound a cloth about it.

All this was strange and new to Kazan. Pierre's hand, as well as the girl's, stroked his head. It was the man who brought him a gruel of meal and tallow, and urged him to eat, while Joan sat with her chin in her two hands, looking at the dog, and talking to him. After this, when he was quite comfortable, and no longer afraid, he heard a strange small cry from the furry bundle on the sledge that brought his head up with a jerk.

Joan saw the movement, and heard the low answering whimper in his throat. She turned quickly to the bundle, talking and cooing to it as she took it in her arms, and then she pulled back the bearskin so that Kazan could see. He had never seen a baby before, and Joan held it out before him, so that he could look straight at it and see what a wonderful creature it was. Its little pink face stared steadily at Kazan. Its tiny fists reached out, and it made queer little sounds at him, and then suddenly it kicked and screamed with delight and laughed. At those sounds Kazan's whole body relaxed, and he dragged himself to the girl's feet.

"See, he likes the baby!" she cried. "Mon pere, we must give him a name. What shall it be?"

"Wait till morning for that," replied the father. "It is late, Joan. Go into the tent, and sleep. We have no dogs now, and will travel slowly. So we must start early."

With her hand on the tent-flap, Joan turned.

"He came with the wolves," she said. "Let us call him Wolf." With one arm she was holding the little Joan. The other she stretched out to Kazan. "Wolf! Wolf!" she called softly.

Kazan's eyes were on her. He knew that she was speaking to him, and he drew himself a foot toward her.

"He knows it already!" she cried. "Good night, mon pere."

For a long time after she had gone into the tent, old Pierre Radisson sat on the edge of the sledge, facing the fire, with Kazan at his feet. Suddenly the silence was broken again by Gray Wolf's lonely howl deep in the forest. Kazan lifted his head and whined.

"She's calling for you, boy," said Pierre understandingly.

He coughed, and clutched a hand to his breast, where the pain seemed rending him.

"Frost-bitten lung," he said, speaking straight at Kazan. "Got it early in the winter, up at Fond du Lac. Hope we'll get home—in time—with the kids."

In the loneliness and emptiness of the big northern wilderness one falls into the habit of talking to one's self. But Kazan's head was alert, and his eyes watchful, so Pierre spoke to him.

"We've got to get them home, and there's only you and me to do it," he said, twisting his beard. Suddenly he clenched his fists.

His hollow racking cough convulsed him again.

"Home!" he panted, clutching his chest. "It's eighty miles straight north—to the Churchill—and I pray to God we'll get there—with the kids—before my lungs give out."

He rose to his feet, and staggered a little as he walked. There was a collar about Kazan's neck, and he chained him to the sledge. After that he dragged three or four small logs upon the fire, and went quietly into the tent where Joan and the baby were already asleep. Several times that night Kazan heard the distant voice of Gray Wolf calling for him, but something told him that he must not answer it now. Toward dawn Gray Wolf came close in to the camp, and for the first time Kazan replied to her.

CHAPTER VIII.

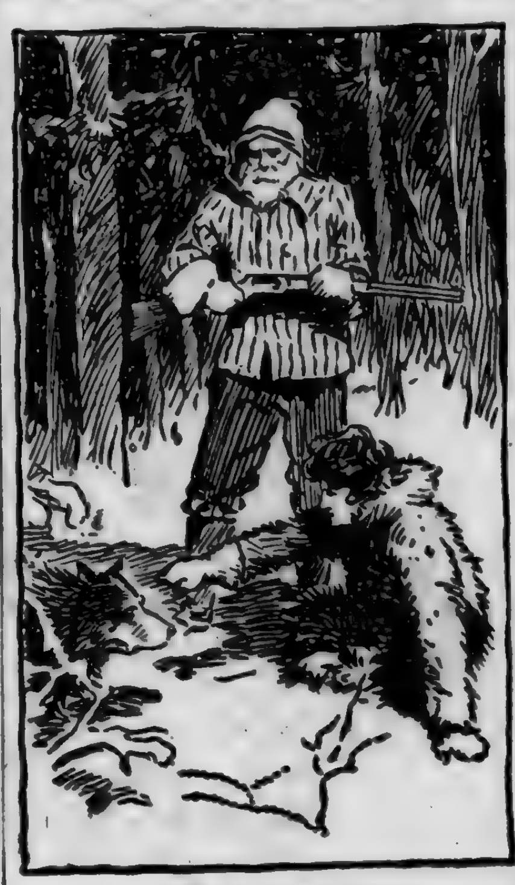
The Message.

Kazan's howl awakened the man. He came out of the tent, peered for a few moments up at the sky, built up the fire, and began to prepare breakfast. He patted Kazan on the head, and gave him a chunk of meat. Joan came out a few moments later, leaving the baby asleep in the tent. She ran up and kissed Pierre, and then dropped down on her knees beside Kazan, and talked to him almost as he had heard her talk to the baby. When she jumped up to help her father, Kazan followed her, and when Joan saw him standing firmly upon his legs she gave a cry of pleasure.



"I Guessed That Much."

It was a strange journey that began into the north that day. Pierre Radisson emptied the sledge of everything but the tent, blankets, food and the furry nest for baby Joan. Then he harnessed himself in the traces and dragged the sledge over the snow. He coughed incessantly.

"It's a cough I've had half the winter," lied Pierre, careful that Joan saw no sign of blood on his lips or beard. "I'll keep in the cabin for a week when we get home."

Even Kazan, with that strange beast knowledge which man, unable to explain, calls instinct, knew that what he said was not the truth. Perhaps it was largely because he had heard other men cough like this, and that for generations his sledge-dog ancestors had heard men cough as Radisson coughed—and had learned what followed it.

More than once he had scented death in tepees and cabins, which he had not entered, and more than once he had sniffed at the mystery of death that was not quite present, but near—just as he had caught at a distance the subtle warning of storm and of fire. And that strange thing seemed to be very near to him now, as he followed at the end of his chain behind the sledge. It made him restless, and half a dozen times, when the sledge stopped, he sniffed at the bit of humanity buried in the bearskin. Each time that he did this Joan was quickly at his side, and twice she patted his scarred and grizzled head until every drop of blood in his body leaped riotously with a joy which his body did not reveal.

This day the chief thing that he came to understand was that the little creature on the sledge was very precious to the girl who stroked his head and talked to him, and that it was very helpless. He learned, too, that Joan was most delighted, and that her voice was softer and thrilled him more deeply, when he paid attention to that little, warm, living thing in the bearskin.

For a long time after they made camp Pierre Radisson sat beside the fire. Tonight he did not smoke. He stared straight into the flames. When at last he rose to go into the tent with the girl and the baby, he bent over Kazan and examined his hurt.

"You've got to work in the traces tomorrow, boy," he said. "We must make the river by tomorrow night. If we don't—"

He did not finish. He was choking back one of those tearing coughs when the tent-flap dropped behind him. Kazan lay stiff and alert, his eyes filled with a strange anxiety. He did not like to see Radisson enter the tent, for stronger than ever there hung that oppressive mystery in the air about him, and it seemed to be a part of Pierre.

Three times that night he heard faithful Gray Wolf calling for him deep in the forest, and each time he answered her. Toward dawn she came in close to camp. Once he caught the scent of her when she circled around in the wind, and he tugged and whined at the end of his chain, hoping that she would come in and lie down at his side. But no sooner had Radisson moved in the tent than Gray Wolf was gone. The man's face was thinner, and his eyes were redder this morning. His cough was not so loud or so rending. It was like a wheeze, as if something had given way inside, and before the girl came out he clutched his hands often to his throat. Joan's face whitened when she saw him. Anxiety gave way to fear in her eyes. Pierre Radisson laughed when she flung her arms about him, and coughed to prove that what he said was true.

"You see the cough is not so bad, my Joan," he said. "It is breaking up. You cannot have forgotten, ma cherie? It always leaves one red-eyed and weak."

It was a cold, bleak, dark day that followed, and through it Kazan and the man tugged at the fore of the sledge, with Joan following in the trail behind. Kazan's wound no longer hurt him. He pulled steadily with all his splendid strength, and the man never lashed him once, but patted him with his mittened hand on head and back. The day grew steadily darker, and in the tops of the trees there was the low moaning of a storm.

Darkness and the coming of the storm did not drive Pierre Radisson into camp. "We must reach the river," he said to himself over and over again. "We must reach the river—we must reach the river—" And he steadily urged Kazan on to greater effort, while his own strength at the end of the traces grew less.

It had begun to storm when Pierre stopped to build a fire at noon. The snow fell straight down in a white deluge so thick that it hid the tree trunks fifty yards away. Pierre laughed when Joan shivered and snuggled close up to him with the baby in her arms. He waited only an hour, and then fastened Kazan in the traces again, and buckled the straps once more about his own waist. In the silent gloom that was almost night Pierre carried his compass in his hand, and at last, late in the afternoon, they came to a break in the timber line, and ahead of them lay a plain, across which Radisson pointed an exultant hand.

"There's the river, Joan," he said, his voice faint and husky. "We can camp here now and wait for the storm to pass."

Under a thick clump of spruce he put up the tent, and then began gathering firewood. Joan helped him. As soon as they had boiled coffee and eaten a supper of meat and toasted biscuits, Joan went into the tent and dropped exhausted on her thick bed of balsam boughs, wrapping herself and the baby up close in the skins and blankets. Tonight she had no word for Kazan. And Pierre was glad that she was too tired to sit beside the fire and talk.

The fine, brave dog strain in Kazan comes to the front again in a crisis and once more he performs a great service—as described in the next installment.

Marvelous Banyan Tree.

The giant banyan under which Alexander is said to have camped with 7,000 men, now measures nearly 1,000 feet across the head, contains about 3,000 trunks and forms a dense canopy through which the sunshine never penetrates. Several other species also propagate in like manner.

WINE MAKES DRUNKARDS.

Some years ago, as a W. C. T. U. organizer, I had occasion to take a freight train one Monday morning across a beautiful stretch of the Sacramento valley to meet an appointment for that evening. A freight train is not supposed to stop often, but the only passenger trains being through trains with inconvenient hours, this freight became an accommodation train and stopped with terrific jolts wherever flagged. This occurred many times and each time a drunken man, perhaps two or three, came aboard. Usually they at once fell asleep in their seats and with each jolt of the car were liable to roll off. Asking the conductor for an explanation I was told, "Oh, these are just Monday drunks, mostly farm hands from ranches who have been over at the winery on Sunday and were too drunk to get home last night. Half of them won't be fit for work before Wednesday."

I spent a month in Sonoma county before the present cross-country railroads were in use. I went back and forth like a shuttle over the stage roads, often with the same driver, of whom I asked so many questions that I afterwards learned he assumed that I was a widow looking for a home to purchase. His business was largely express, taking produce to market and bringing parcels from town. At every stopping place the courtesy of a glass of wine was offered. He sometimes accepted, extending the offer to his passengers. In declining it I asked, "Is this native wine intoxicating?" He repeated my question, "Is it intoxicating, ye say? Do ye moind that? There was a Sunday picnic from the city up here yesterday," and he pointed to the helpless figure of a well-dressed young man lying hatless in the gutter under the broiling sun, adding, "They get drunk slower on this native wine, and it takes a deal longer to get 'em sober. He won't get to work for a day or two."

On my last day with this driver he volunteered some friendly advice. "Now, if it's a home you're looking for don't buy one of these pretty vineyards. They don't pay. I've been deputy sheriff of this county many years, and I know who gets sold out by the sheriff, for I serve the papers," and the good man drove out of his way to show the chicken ranches that paid better than vineyards. "And I know that too," said he, "for I take their chickens and eggs every week to the railroad and bring back their money."—Dorcas J. Spencer.

JEWS FOR PROHIBITION.

"The Drink Question From the Jewish Point of View." This was the subject of an address in the Free Synagogue, Carnegie hall, New York, by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, one of the leading Hebrews of the United States. The Jews, he declared, believe in prohibition—prohibition, not for the few but for everybody.

"Rum," he said, "is a blessing only for the idle rich, for the extinction of their kind, and as a means to make their perpetuation impossible, but to Jews and non-Jews alike it is a menace. To young Jewish men generally I say, 'Free yourselves of the harrowing restraints of the cocktail and the cigarette.' The prohibition question is no Jewish question. It is an American problem. Do not let us think about ourselves, but let us think of the welfare of the whole country. Let the verdict be, 'Alcohol must die.'"

CONDEMNS ALCOHOL.

"Realizing the death rate caused directly and indirectly by the use of alcohol, it seems a part of the duty of the medical profession, whose work it is to prevent as well as cure disease, to use their efforts to discourage and put a stop to this evil, which is exacting such a heavy toll from mankind.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the Manatee County (Florida) Medical association will discourage the writing of prescriptions for its indiscriminate use.

"Resolved, second, That alcohol as a stimulant, can be eliminated from the pharmacopoeia without in any way crippling the efficiency of the doctors' armamentarium."

MOTHERS SHOULD ABSTAIN.

Doctor Condi in "Alcohol a Dangerous and Unnecessary Medicine," says:

"Never was there a more absurd or pernicious notion than that wine, ale or porter is necessary to a nursing mother in order to keep up her strength, or to increase the quantity, and improve the properties of her milk. So far from producing these effects, such drinks, when taken in any quantity, invariably disturb more or less the health of the stomach, and tend to impair the quality and diminish the quantity of nourishment furnished by her to her infant."

SOBER ARMY.

"A change has come over the army," declared Maj. Dan Morgan Smith, at a meeting of the Illinois Anti-Saloon league at the Great Northern hotel of Chicago. The major had just returned from the Mexican border. A corporal will now say to the men, "You have got to hike to Austin, but you can't drink and hike." When a man falls out of the ranks he is given spirits of ammonia and not ardent spirits. When an officer says to a brother officer, "Let's take a drink," they both head for a drug store

Canada Offers 160 Acres Free to Farm Hands
Bonus of Western Canada Land to Men Assisting in Maintaining Needed Grain Production

The demand for farm labor in Canada is great. As an inducement to secure the necessary help at once, Canada will give

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY ACRES OF LAND FREE AS A HOMESTEAD

and allow the time of the farm laborer, who has filed on the land, to apply as residence duties, the same as if he actually had lived on it. This special concession is the reduction of one year in the time to complete duties. Two years' residence instead of three as heretofore, but only to men working on the farms for at least six months in 1917. This appeal for farm help is in no way connected with enlistment for military service but solely to increase agricultural output. A wonderful opportunity to secure a farm and draw good wages at the same time. Canadian Government will pay all fare over one cent per mile from St. Paul or Duluth to Canadian destination. Information as to low railway rates may be had on application to

Not the Whole Truth.

"I have nothing against the Edinburgh people," said a gentleman who hied from the great outer world, "but I must say I've found greater fellow feeling elsewhere. My hat blew away on Saturday, and though everybody beside me took a warm interest in its perambulations, nobody joined in pursuit."

"Eh, but ye wrong Edinburgh folk," replied one of his hearers. "D'ye ken what I saw on Setterday? A man's hat blew off just as a cable car wis passin', and the driver stopped the car and sprinted awa doon the road efter it. Can ye beat that in the sooth?"

The stranger said he really couldn't, and would chalk it up to Edinburgh's credit.

"Wis it act'lly true, Tam?" asked a friend, after the "foreigner" had departed.

"Aye, wis it, but d'ye think I wud tell that it wis the driver's ain cap that blew off?"

BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP

A Valued Household Remedy for Over Half a Century.

In our climate, with its sudden changes of temperature, rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day, it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, many deaths resulting from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept in the house, and a few doses taken in time, will possibly prevent a severe illness, a doctor's bill, and perhaps death. For fifty years this has been a very successful remedy for coughs, colds, throat or lung troubles. It induces a good night's sleep with easy expectoration in the morning. For sale by druggists in all parts of the civilized world, 25 and 75 cent bottles.—Adv.

AN ANCIENT JAPANESE ART

Embroidery Made in Flowery Kingdom for Centuries Before Country Was Opened to World.

Japanese embroidary, now so popular in this country, is one of the oldest arts of the mikado's people. For centuries before the country was opened to foreign intercourse heavily embroidered silk kimonos, screens, and other articles were made by professional embroidery experts, principally in Kyoto. This same profession continues today, having been handed down from father to son for many generations. For this reason the center of the country's art-embroidery industry is at Kyoto, although cheaper embroideries, principally for export, are produced in large quantities in other part of the Kobe district.

The majority of the workers in Kyoto are men, who produce the finer grades of embroidery. It is essentially a household industry, and is usually conducted in small shops, where from three to ten apprentices and skilled embroiderers are employed. The men received from 40 to 75 cents gold per day. The women, however, are able to earn from 15 to 50 cents gold per day, depending upon their ability and diligence.

The manufacture of hand-made lace is a comparatively new industry in Japan, as lace was not used by the Japanese before the advent of foreigners. The industry is still in its infancy, and the output is small.

"REALLY, NOW—
"I can't take that. I must have Red Cross Ball Blue. I have used it for more than ten years. My white dresses, linens and lace curtains are snowy white. I simply can't do without Red Cross Ball Blue. You will get it? All right, I'll wait."—Adv.

Do You Neglect Your Machinery?

The machinery of the body needs to be well oiled, kept in good condition just as the automobile, steam engine or bicycle. Why should the human neglect his own machinery more than that of his horse or his engine? Yet most people do neglect themselves. To clean the system at least once a week is to practice preventive measures. You will escape many ills and clear up the coated tongue, the sallow complexion, the dull headache, the lazy liver, if you will take a pleasant laxative made up of the May-apple, juice of the leaves of aloes, root of jalap, and called Pleasant Pellets. You can obtain at almost any drug store in this country these vegetable pellets in vials for 25c—simply ask for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. There can be no counterfeit if they have the Dr. Pierce stamp. Proven good by 50 years' use.

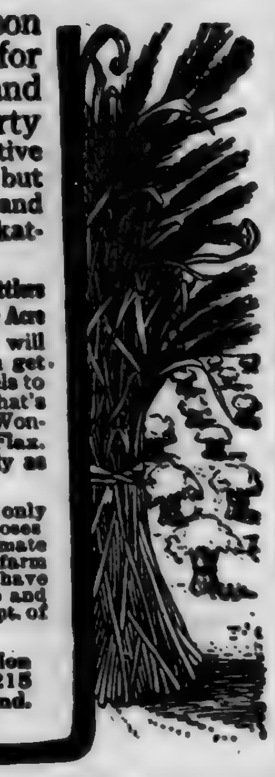
160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE



Canada's Liberal Offer of Wheat Land to Settlers

is open to you—to every farmer or farmer's son who is anxious to establish for himself a happy home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is much higher but her fertile farm land just as cheap, and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

160 Acre Homesteads Are Actually Free to Settlers and Other Land Sold at from $15 to $20 per Acre

The great demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Where a farmer can get near $2 for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre he is bound to make money—that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming in Western Canada is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising.

The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. There is an unusual demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. CHINESE MILITARY TACTICS

Celestials Planned to Trip Up Foes, Throw Water in Their Faces and Then Cut Off Their Heads.

At the beginning of the Chino-Japanese war, says a contributor to the Washington Star, one of our military attaches saw a Chinese regiment take the field at a review and go through a very curious performance.

The soldiers carried long bamboo poles like fishing rods, and with these they rushed at one another, yelling wildly and making very queer gestures and grimaces.

"What's the game?" asked the American.

"That regiment," a Chinese general answered, "is one of our very oldest. It is now practicing a form of assault that dates from prehistoric times. The idea is to trip the enemy up with the long wand, throw water in his face and, in the midst of his bewilderment at this extraordinary treatment, to cut off his head."—Youth's Companion.

A Rare Breed.

"He gives his family everything they want."

"Yes. He's one of the few men to whom the five-dollar bill they give their wives to spend doesn't look any bigger than the five-dollar bill they toss onto the bar to pay for drinks for the crowd."

A lie has no legs, but it never feels the need of them while on its travels.

Whistlerian Malice.

"Whistler always brought a spirit of fun with him," says the late Lord Redesdale in his memories; and the incident that follows appears to confirm his lordship's words:

There came a day when, to my great regret, Whistler made up his mind to leave the old house in which he had lived for 14 years and to build the "White House" in Tite street, mainly prompted, so he told me, by the wish to show what he could achieve in decoration. E. W. Godwin was the architect, and it was not long before they quarreled over the work, in commemoration of which Whistler caused a stone to be inserted in the front of the house, engraved with the words:

"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. E. W. Godwin, F. S. A., built this house."

The stone has long since disappeared. Godwin died in 1886, and in 1888 Whistler married his widow—a quaint ending to an artistic feud.

Considering "H. C. L."

"O mamma, come here," called Maud, "a whole lot of kittens are in our cat's basket."

"Our cat has got these kittens for herself," laughed mother. "Hasn't she a nice family?"

"Well," said Maud, "it is all right to have a family, but I should think she would have them one at a time."

A pneumatic hammer for tamping paving stones has been invented.

PROPOSAL KILLED BY REPUBLICANS

Leaders of Party Turn Down Plan for Election of Delegates to Convention.

TAKE QUICK, DECISIVE ACTION

Agricultural Experts of the State Mobilized by State Food Director Christie and Assigned to the Corn Counties.

Indianapolis.—The Republican state committee and a special committee of 13 men framed a resolution stating that they find it the opinion of state Republicans that an attempt of the Republican and Democratic parties to pick candidates for the positions of delegates-at-large to the constitutional convention would be unwise.

The resolution was brought before 200 Republican workers and editors at a general conference. Intense opposition stirred up in the state by the proposal caused the action. State Chairman Hayes and several Republican leaders previously had indorsed the plan as suggested by the Democratic committee on the ground that the best men in both parties could be seated in the constitutional convention.

The Republican general conference approved rejection of the plan to select candidates for delegates to the constitutional convention.

Agricultural Experts Assigned.

G. I. Christie, state food director, mustered his army of agricultural experts and gave his final instructions. They numbered 40 Purdue professors and highest grade agricultural students and the agricultural teachers in the vocational schools of the state. All these forces have been taken out of the agricultural experiment station and college and schoolrooms and assigned to field work.

After their final sessions with Christie in the afternoon they left to fill their assignments in the corn counties of the state. They will work in connection with the county agents and county committees.

Other experts are being mobilized for the other counties.

Their work for the next two weeks is to be confined to testing seed corn and instructing farmers how to test it. They are to exert every effort along lines of having all of the seed corn closely examined and the poor seed substituted by good, so that the seed that is planted will produce more than the 70 per cent average that has in former years been largely attributable to poor seed selection.

Osborne to Direct Indianapolis.

Professor Christie spent the morning at Purdue, mustering that institution's instructors and advanced agricultural farming at large city tracts and gardening in cities. He obtained the release of Prof. C. C. Osborne from the agricultural station faculty, to take the position of director of tract and lot gardening in Indianapolis, at the request of Mayor Bell and the Indianapolis committee.

During the morning, requests for expert directors came in from Newcastle, Columbus, Marion, North Vernon and a number of other cities, and Purdue experts will be assigned. In all this work men who are taken from teaching or from the classes of the vocational schools will receive proper school credits for work in the field.

Every vacant lot in Marion and vicinity will be planted in garden truck.

Urges Wholesalers to Help.

Prof. G. I. Christie of Purdue university, who has been appointed state food director by Governor Goodrich, has urged the wholesale grocers of Indiana to co-operate in the movement for conserving the food production of the state, which has been started as one of the war expediences. Professor Christie made a short talk at the annual convention of the Indiana Wholesale Grocers' association, which is being held at the Claypool hotel.

"The wholesale men and jobbers of the state," he said, "can do a great work in assisting in preserving and increasing the food production of Indiana during these trying times. We are going to face a crisis in food problems, when we will be called upon to feed people outside of our own state.

"The duty of the wholesale grocers will be to co-operate in the efficient and correct distribution of food products so that they may be distributed in a way to accomplish the most good."

Professor Christie urged the wholesale men to go back to their communities and arouse enthusiasm in the campaign to have gardens planted on the vacant lots in the cities and towns of the state.

Governor Says, "No Special Session."

Governor Goodrich has authorized the publication of a statement that there "will be no special session of the legislature called in Indiana now or in the near future. He explained that a meeting of members of the legislature, called for the governor's office, was for the purpose of discussing whether certain expenditures that may become necessary in the event of the mobilization of large bodies of troops and food conservation, incident to the war situation, would be taken care of by the 1919 regular session of assembly.

Judges Ineligible as Delegates.

An extended brief dealing with the question whether judges of courts are eligible to sit as delegates in the constitutional convention has been prepared by Emerson E. Ballard, an attorney at Crawfordsville. He arrives at the conclusion, after citing many court decisions and authorities on constitutional law, that judges are ineligible.

He maintains that the office of delegate to the convention is an office of trust and profit. A question has arisen regarding the eligibility of members of the legislatures, judges and other public officers to sit as delegates. John A. Lapp, head of the legislative reference bureau at the state house, said to a representative of the Star that any public officer—even the governor—is eligible to sit as a delegate and to draw salary for both positions at the same time.

Mr. Ballard confines his brief to the question regarding the eligibility of judges. He proceeds on the theory in his argument that the law itself is constitutional. His brief is interesting on account of the report that Judge W. H. Eichhorn of Bluffton, a prominent member of the Citizens' league, is a candidate for delegate.

Basis of Opinion.

Mr. Ballard's brief says in part:

"The powers of the government are divided into three separate departments, the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial, and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this constitution expressly provided. (Const. Art. 3, Par. 1, Burns' Stat., Par. 96.) This is a constitutional provision which the courts are inclined to enforce with much strictness.

"The work of a constitutional convention is legislative. It has nothing to do with making the supreme law of the land and has nothing to do with its execution of judicial construction. The work of the judiciary follows the work of the convention.

"By Art. 7 of the constitution of Indiana, 'the judicial power of the state' is vested in certain courts. They have no legislative power and by the fiat of the constitution they are divorced from the work of lawmaking.

"The act itself impliedly excludes judges. A studious inspection of the constitutional convention act discloses that the legislature had it clearly in mind that the judges of our courts would not be members of the proposed convention."

Wants Statehouse Lawn for Garden.

Gardens on the whole of the statehouse and the courthouse lawns, as examples to the state and the city of the importance of using all vacant ground in food production were suggested in letters sent to Governor Goodrich and Mayor Bell by Mrs. Henry Ostrom. She is prominent in club work in Indianapolis and is superintendent of the press department of the National Woman's Christian Temperance union.

The letter to the governor says:

"In passing by the Indiana statehouse today I was reminded of the splendid initiative you have taken concerning the solution of the problem of increased food production in our state, and it occurred to me that as an example to the people of our state and as a suggestion to other states, our beautiful statehouse grounds might very appropriately be converted into a model garden.

An Example of Sacrifice.

"While the actual amount of foodstuffs which might be raised on this state-owned piece of ground would not be sufficient to feed many soldiers, yet the very example of the sacrifice of the beautiful lawn to purposes of thrift would prove an inspiration to many citizens who have not taken seriously to the idea of the citizen-gardener. The same principle would be involved, only on a far grander scale, as is to be found in the recent action of James A. Patten of Evanston, who has planted his own yard in potatoes, as an evidence of his patriotism.

"Since the appointment of Prof. G. I. Christie of Purdue university as state-food director, a model garden under the shadow of the statehouse, with him in charge, would afford a sort of pattern for the many amateur truck gardeners, who, because the business men are so preoccupied, are destined to be for the most part women, like myself, with little or no previous instruction or experience in converting back yards into assets for the nation."

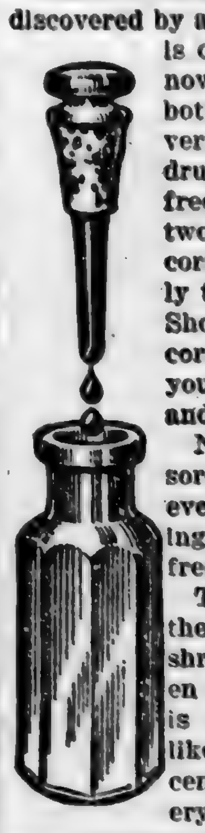
Park Lands for Farms.

Several hundred acres of park land in Indianapolis are available for farming purposes. James H. Lowry, superintendent of parks, said there are 70 acres of ground forming a part of Riverside park that frequently are used for agricultural purposes, and he estimated that 25 acres of this ground would be used this year for raising corn to be fed to horses owned by the department. The department hopes to raise enough corn in this manner to supply its own needs.

The board has consented to the use of five acres of ground at Riverside park, on which potatoes will be grown.

Makes Seed Preferred Shipment.

Gov. James P. Goodrich has received telegrams from Senators James E. Watson and Harry S. New saying the interstate commerce commission will consider his request for an order making fertilizer and seed preferred shipments on all railroads. The governor said that the public service commission of Indiana at his request has issued an order making fertilizer and seeds for garden and farm products preferred freight in this state for the present. He has been urging Washington to take similar action.



PAIN? NOT A BIT! LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

As to File Clerks.

John Haymond of Muncie was file clerk in the Indiana house of representatives. He was approached by a young woman of his acquaintance, who asked, "And what does a file clerk do, Mr. Haymond?"

"Why, he does just what his title indicates," responded the young man. "He files things."

"Ah, how plain you make it," she said. "I used to have an uncle in Winchester who was a blacksmith, and he filed things, but they never called him a clerk."—Indianapolis News.

I suffered from a serious female trouble and the doctors said I could not live one year without an operation. My husband objected to the operation and had me try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I soon commenced to get better and am now well and able to do my own housework. I can recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman as a wonderful health restorer."—Mrs. Blanche Jefferson, 703 Lyon St., Des Moines, Iowa.

Another Operation Avoided.

Richmond, Ind.—"For two years I was so sick and weak from female troubles that when going up stairs I had to go very slowly with my hands on the steps, then sit down at the top to rest. The doctor said he thought I should have an operation, and my friends thought I would not live to move into our new house. My daughter asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had taken it with good results. I did so, my weakness disappeared, I gained in strength, moved into our new home, do all kinds of garden work, and raised hundreds of chickens and ducks. I cannot say enough in praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. M. O. Johnston, Route D, Box 190, Richmond, Ind.

Of course there are many serious cases that only a surgical operation will relieve. We freely acknowledge this, but the above letters, and many others like them, amply prove that many operations are recommended when medicine in many cases is all that is needed.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

TO-MORROW
TO-MORROW
TO-MORROW

NO man wants to arrive at such a destinatation. But where will he end if he continues his purposeless course by putting off until tomorrow that long-expected intention to start a bank account? There's no better paving for the road to somewhere—at the end of which lies success—than a bank account.

Nothing can keep you from a worth-while destination if you work hard, save regularly and invest your money wisely. Saving not only accumulates money, but it gives you that financial independence that enables you to reach out ahead and grasp opportunities as they are presented to you, and to create others.

Come in and let us talk it over. Let us show you what real bank character and service are and how they can help you on the road to somewhere and success and independence.

Man Killed by B. & O.

Two young men, aged about 30, L. Wade, of Swartz Creek, Mich., and W. A. Harter, of Leipsic, Ohio, were hit by the B. & O. eastbound train due here at 11:07 a. m., yesterday. They were brought to St. Joe, where Wade died soon after his arrival. His companion was more fortunate, escaping with a cut behind the left ear, a cut on the right leg and some bruises. The accident occurred about 2 miles west of Concord. The two men were riding a railway speeder. Reports are so conflicting that the NEWS is unable to give details.

Mrs. Flora Gee is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Lucile Provines, of Concord, for a couple of days.

Seeds For Farmers

County Agent A. Z. Arehart has been asked by the United States department of agriculture to make a canvass of DeKalb county and report any shortage that farmers may have in seeds for this spring's planting, such as corn, oats, soy beans, etc., with the probable bushels needed.

Mr. Arehart is also asked to ascertain if DeKalb county farmers have any seed for sale, as the department of agriculture is making an effoat to see that every farmer has seed enough this year to plant the entire acreage of his place

Clip out the coupon below and let County Agent Arehart know just what your needs are or what you have to sell. It is a patriotic duty you owe to your country.

F. M. Wiltrout, of Corunna, and Miss Elva L. Albright, of Hamilton, Ind., were united in marriage at the residence of Rev. L. W. Spayd, on April 15. Mr. Wiltrout is a school teacher, who stands high and well in his profession, and in high esteem in his home town. Miss Albright is also a teacher, having taught for many years. The wedding was a quiet one and on account of the bride having a couple of weeks more of school was not made public at once. They will make Corunna their home at the close of her school.

Junior-Senior Banquet

One of the most enjoyable affairs of commencememt week was the reception and banquet given Saturday night at the High School by the Juniors in honor of the Seniors. A short program consisting of songs, essays, and a clever playette occupied the forepart of the evening, after which an elaborate four course banquet was served. The recitation room was most artistically decorated, old rose and white, the Junior colors being conspicuous, while the class flowers, pink and white sweet peas carried out the color scheme of the same room. The banqueting room presented just as harmonious an appearance, decorated in red and white, the Senior class colors. The long banqueting table gave a pleasing effect, tastefully laid with its white linen and silver and decorated with white rose buds. The place cards were unique affairs in white with tiny red rose buds in conventional design The same design and color was used on the small mit baskets, tied with dainty red bows. Clayton B. Hathaway presided as toast master and toasts were given by Estel Coburn, Vernie Monroe, and Miss Shordon. Impromptu responses were made by the Seniors, Herbert Curie, Stanley Koch, and Harvey Hull.

Mothers of America

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

IN THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

I love my country. There is nothing that she can ask I will not do. I am ready to live for her or die for her. Last stand of the humanities on earth, realization of a dream and fulfillment of a dream, my home, my native land—that is America to me. Because I am a woman, I can not die for my country; but I am doing a far harder thing. I am giving a son to the service of his country, the land he loves.

Once, over there, I saw a boy dying in a railway station. He knew two English words. So he said:

"All right. All right."

It was all right with him. He had done his bit, and he knew that there were others to take his place and that the world nation would not rest until the war beast was chained. It was "All right."

And so now, on the brink of war or perhaps at war, I know it is all right with us. We have been the melting pot, but under the pot there has been no fire. Now the fire has come, a white flame, and we will fuse at last. But it will burn and sear. And to that, I wonder, can we all say "All right?"

All over Europe boys have left their homes, with a shamefaced tear or two perhaps, but with the great adventure ahead. And they have left at home a great emptiness, a quiet that is not peace.

Then—and very suddenly—they have ceased to be boys on a great adventure; and are men, fighting men, patriots and soldiers. Something that had always been theirs had become a thing that had to be fought for. Not until it was menaced had they known how dear was their country. The flag had been but a flag. It became a symbol of home. I have lived to see my country's flag beside the altar of my church.

Yet war is not necessarily death. I try to comfort myself with this. Perhaps it will comfort other mothers. It is a hazard, but it is a thing of vast rewards and much cheerfulness, of democracy, of big moments and little feasts, of smiles and grumbling, of labor and rest, of that joy in its own kind that only the boy knows. And underneath it all, buried weep and never articulate, is the feeling of doing his bit for his country, which is the foundation on which a nation rests secure.

I wish I could always remember these things. I have panicky times, when the sun dies for me and the world goes black. But I am like the other mothers. I shall go through with it, and I would not have things otherwise. I would not have my son do other than he is doing. He is still in his teens, but he is a man; and this is his country. I have not raised him to be a shirker.

When, some weeks ago, war began to come near, I weakened; and I wrote my oldest son a letter. I was willing to have him do his duty, but I wanted him to wait. Womanlike, I wanted time. I felt that surely this cross was not for me to bear so soon.

Then—and may be forgive me for telling this, because of its purpose—after a day or two he wired, asking his father and myself if we wanted him to be a "quitter." I came to my senses then, and the necessary permission to enlist was signed and sent. Tnen I sat down and wrote to him, saying that we would stand squarely benind him in whatever he did.

Easy? Is was the hardest thing I have ever done. But I am glad now. I should never have forgiven him, I think, had he failed his country. But I nearly failed him.

The American boy is coming in his thousands and tens of thousands. Nothing can hold him back—not danger, not inadequate preparation, not anything under the blue sky where once he sailed his kites and sent up his Fourth of July rockets. Not even the mother he loves.

What are we going to do then, we mothers, when the tumult and shouting have died and the long wait comes?

We will pray—the churches of France are full of kneeling women—and we will work.

There is no spectacular work for mothers to do in war. They can not drive ambulances nor guide airplanes, although they are capable of doing both. There will be no need of the wig wagging that some women are so painfully learning! But they will work for the Red Cross, and they will make up such little packets as only mothers can make—tooth brushes and chocolates and fresh socks and gingerbread, and a Bible and playing cards and cigarettes.

And, in between times, they will wait, in that quiet that is not peace. That is what millions of women are doing just now while you are reading this.

There are two wars being waged today. One is the war of hate, and one is the war of love. And tnis last is the bitter war because it ts being fought in women's hearts, between their fears and patriotism, I know.

So this is how I see the situation today, as it affects me and others like me. If I believe in my country, as God knows I do, if I love it, and that, too, He knows, I must do my little part—my bit.

This the country must know—that women are ready to do their part. Else we are not free women, but slaves. And this the country must know, too—that the women demands that it do its part. The best of preparation, of skill, of guidance, of every sort of provision is what we require and will have.

We will not fail America! Let her not fail us!

NEAT DWELLING DESCRIBED

Plant Dark Leaved Shrubbery Near Structure and Make Foundation of Dark Texture Brick for Most Pleasing Results.

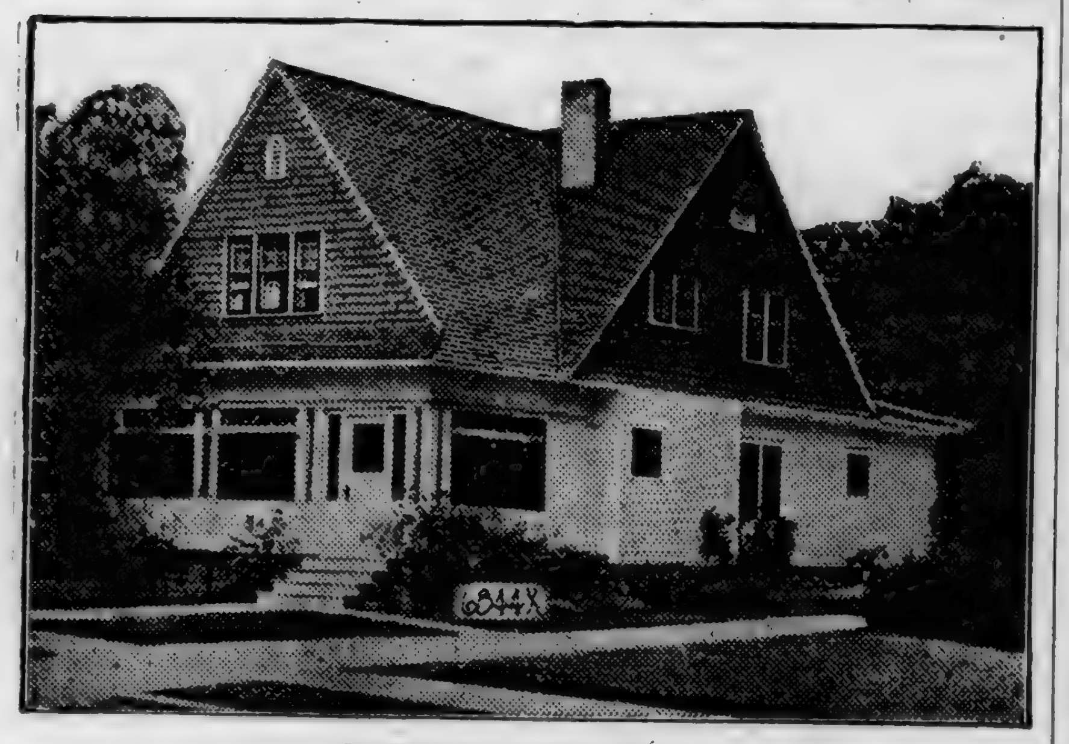
By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

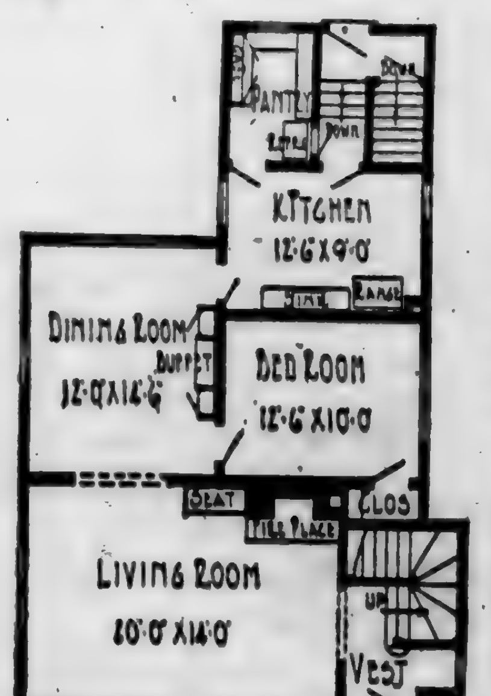
There is, of course, a direct relation between the house and its surroundings. By this we mean that either the surroundings must be laid out for the house, or, as in the case where a spot of special natural beauty is selected for the building site, the house must be designed for the surroundings. The latter case obtains in some small towns and in country estates. The former case, or a compromise between the two, exists in the larger towns and cities.

Perhaps it is not the case in this country so much as it is in some of the European countries, but the fact is true, nevertheless, that for the lover of beauty both natural and architectural, the small town which has been situated where nature has furnished plenty of trees, a pleasing topography and clear-watered streams—such a town offers the best possible site for the building of a home. The point is this: It is cheaper and usually more satisfactory to let nature furnish the attractive surroundings and model the home into the background, than to build the background for the home.

Not that those who have studied into the subject of scenic architecture are not able to produce pleasing surroundings for the house, for they have proved their ability to do so. Because it is impossible for some lovers of beauty to go where nature has provided it, the work of the landscape architect is very important. The small town blessed with natural beauty is, then, not so much to be considered as the only possible site for the building of a beautiful home as it is to be considered as a spot which offers advantages hard to obtain in imitation of nature, unless a large sum of money is available for the purpose.



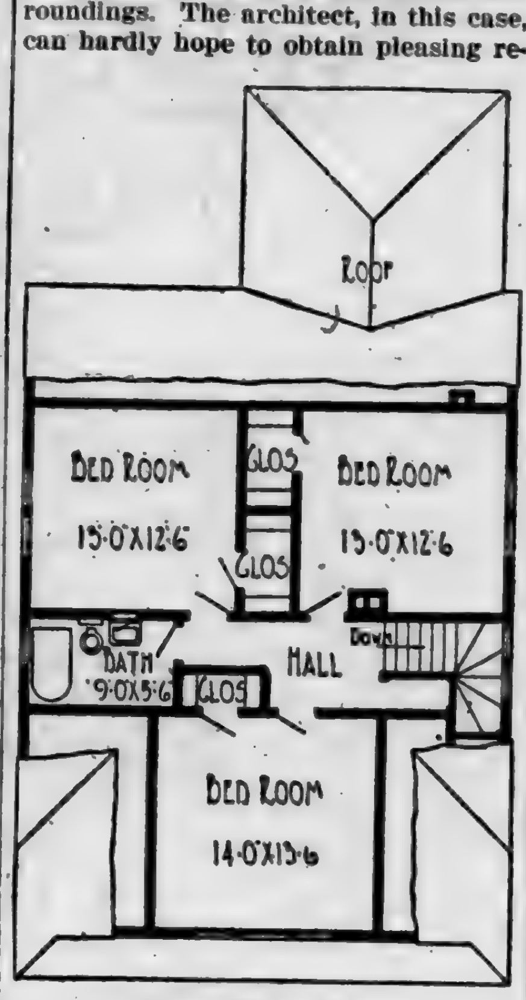
Seven-Room Family House.



First-Floor Plan.

The question might be asked, "Why not go to the country where nature's work has not been marred by the inroads of 'civilization?'" A logical question, and in some cases the affirmative answer is unquestionably the right one. The man who comes from the city, however, or even the town, has been brought up in close touch with the people around him. His habits have been formed in the influence of society. Put him and his family away from the rest of the community and the result is lonesomeness. Therein lies the greatest advantage of the beautiful small town. Habits do not have to be changed, friendships may be formed and the normal conditions of life exist. The man who owns an isolated summer home seldom goes there with his family alone—he crowds the house full of friends (or if he doesn't his wife does). And what is the reason? Simply that "I" is not used when the real pleasures of life are being discussed; the correct pronoun is "We."

What of the case in which nature has not contributed and the means are not available to supply the deficit artificially? The case is not hopeless! By proper architectural treatment a house may be placed on a 50-foot lot which is by no means devoid of beauty. True, it is largely up to the house itself, since little can be expected of the surroundings. The architect, in this case, can hardly hope to obtain pleasing results if the size of the house required is large. When a structure of moderate size is called for, his skill will enable him to so design it that it will appear smaller than it really is.



Second-Floor Plan.

The attractiveness of a house which will yield well to a decorative treatment such as that shown in the accompanying view cannot be questioned. The white lower portion, in contrast with the upper dark portion, is very pleasing and always gives the impression of brightness that goes with well-kept premises. The upper part of the walls is finished with shingles, while the lower walls are faced with beveled siding. The porch is built into the house and fitted in a manner which gives an air of privacy. A set of screens may be used on this porch during the summer time, these to be taken out during the winter and glass sash inserted in their place. The porch will then act as a blanket to protect the front of the house from winter winds.

The small vestibule in which the staircase is built has a cased opening into the living room. The fireplace in this room is tucked cozily into a corner and a little seat is built against the wall at one side of it. A cased opening leads back to the dining room, which is built into the corner of the house—the ideal situation for this room. A first-floor bedroom, which would make an excellent den if not needed for other purposes, is entered from the dining room.

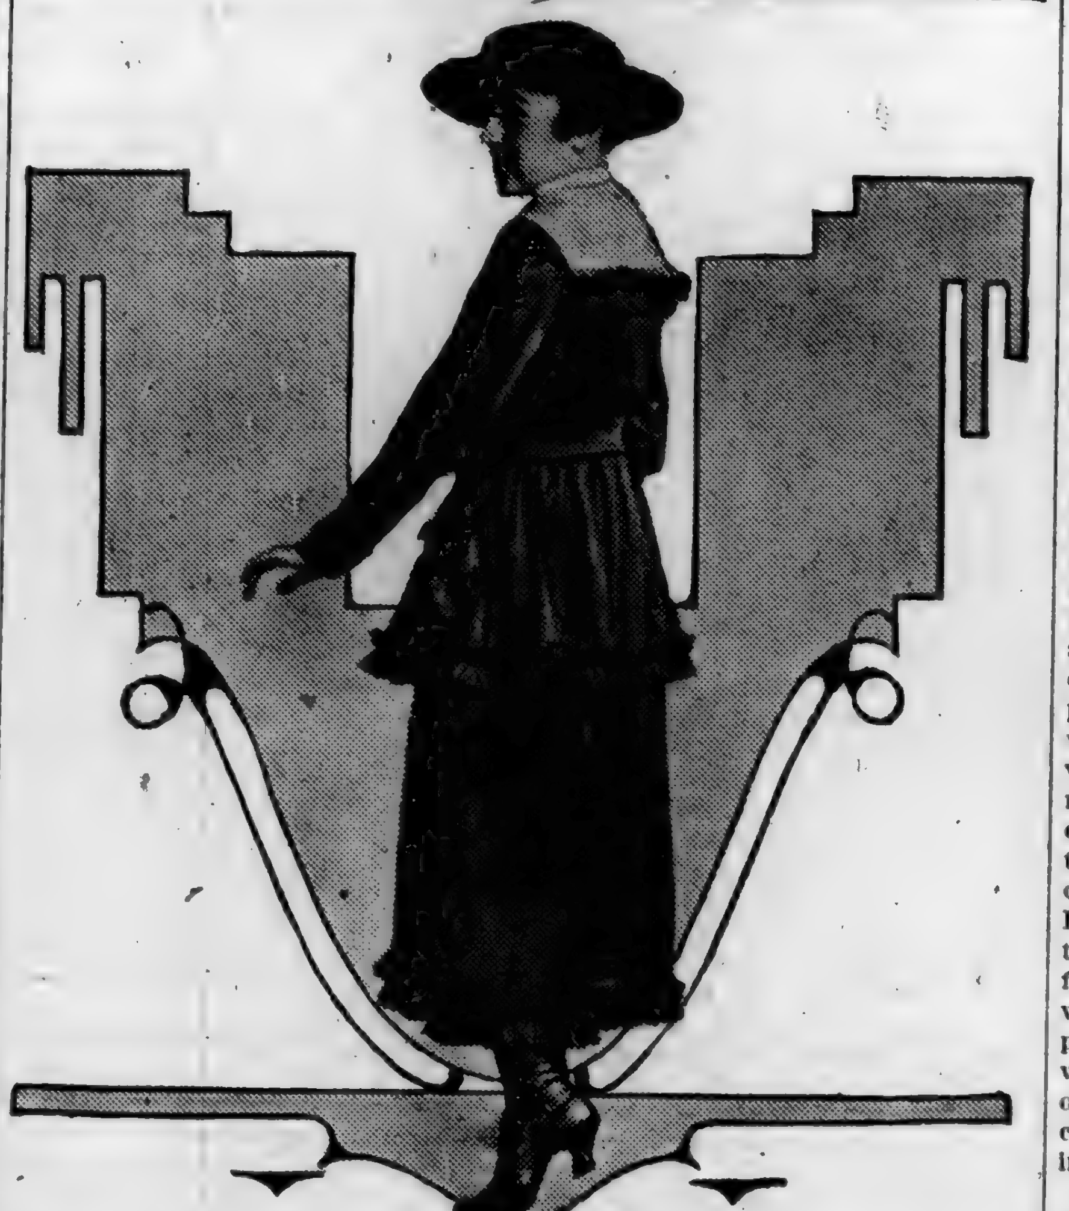
The kitchen with its connecting pantry is well arranged to meet the demands of the critical housewife. A work table is built beneath the pantry window and the cupboards are handily located on either side. The refrigerator may be placed in the pantry, and an opening is provided so that it is iced from the landing at the top of the short flight of steps leading from the grade entrance.

Three very large bedrooms are provided on the second floor. Each has a generous closet fitted with shelves at both ends. The bath is centrally located off the hall at the head of the stairs.

The view also shows a neat and inexpensive two-car garage built on the rear lot line. The garage is painted white to conform with the lower part of the house with which it is in line.

A house finished as this one is, requires the use of dark-leaved shrubbery near the building. The reason is that the upper dark walls need to be balanced by a mass of dark color near the ground. The effect is carried along by building the foundation walls above grade of some dark-colored material such as may be found among the many patterns of modern rough-texture face brick.

When in Doubt Choose Taffeta



"When in doubt, choose taffeta," for everywhere fashion decrees it the ideal silk for afternoon suits and frocks and for the simpler evening dresses. By virtue of the fabric a simple suit of taffeta is more formal and dressy than a plain cloth suit and all the chances are that it will cost less in time and money, to make it. In addition to these advantages there is the matter of color to be considered. Colors that verge on the insipid in materials that lack luster, are wonderfully attractive in taffeta.

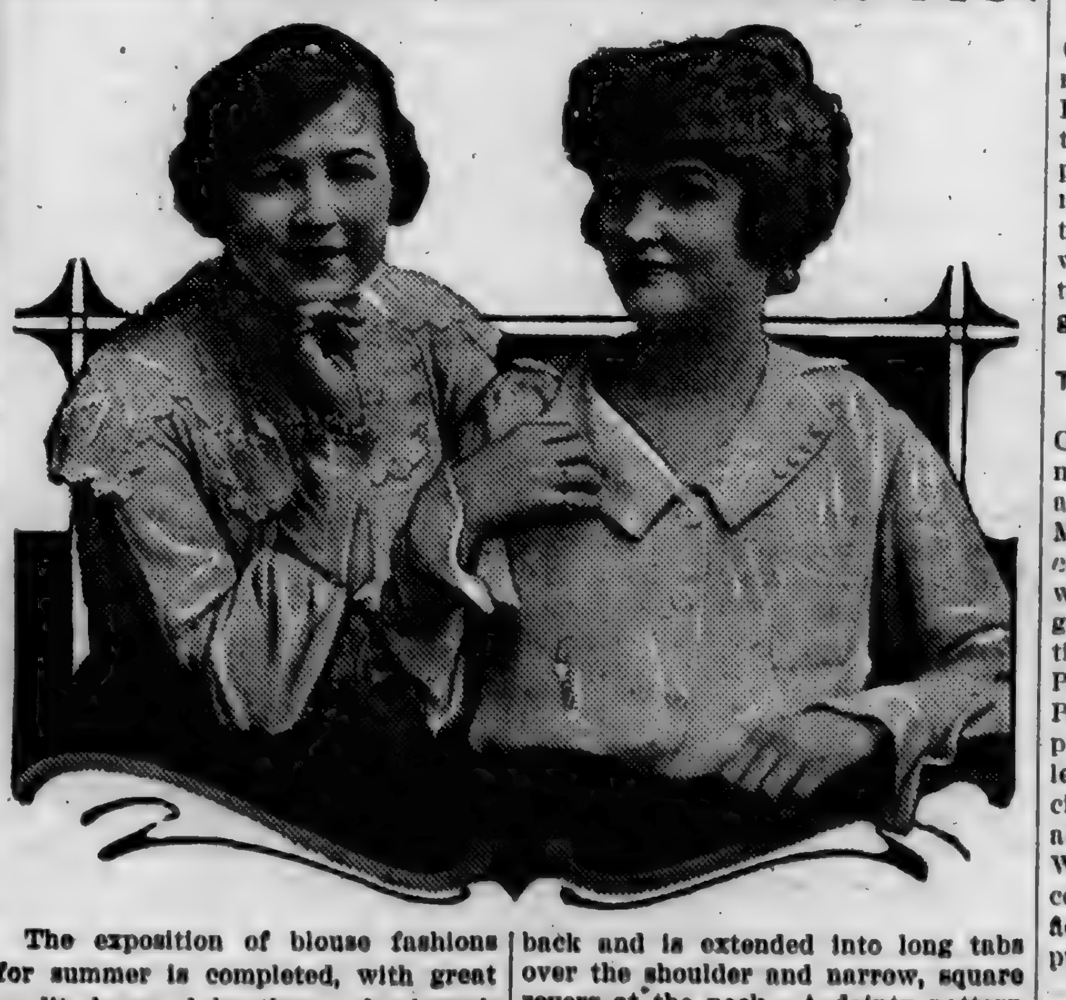
There never was a material that the home dressmaker can handle more easily or one that lends itself better to the making of trimmings. The pretty suit of taffeta shown in the picture illustrates all these advantages which account for the perennial popularity of this long and well-loved silk. It is a simple model with several distinguishing touches that rescue it from the commonplace in designing.

The skirt is straight, hanging from a plain, broad girdle of the silk which fastens at the side. It is finished at the bottom with a ruching of the taffeta having a picot edge. This ruching tends to make the skirt flare, but its ambition in that direction is held in check by a narrow grosgrain ribbon that is threaded through slashes in the silk, just above the ruching. This apparently helps the skirt from departing from the straight and narrow way of new skirt fashions. The ribbon matches the silk in color.

The bottom of the blouse, or coat, whichever you choose to call it, is encouraged to stand off from the figure by the ruching. It attains by this means the wide hip effect which fashion permits to those who find it becoming. The coat is finished with a deep cape collar, trimmed with ruching, and a baggy pocket at each side. It is confined at the waist with a girdle of taffeta with looped-over ends at the front.

A white collar of some kind appears to be always in the mind of those who create styles in taffeta suits or dresses. The collar may be of white crepe or organdie or even of heavier fabrics.

Exposition of Midsummer Blouses



The exposition of blouse fashions for summer is completed, with great credit deserved by those who launch the styles. Unless the unexpected happens, nothing new will be added to it and certainly nothing is needed. Indications point to all white in midsummer styles as preferred over blouses in vivid colors that captivated us all when they made their appearance for spring. But, even so, all white may divide honors with pale colors and combinations of color, in fabrics so sheer that they will look cool in any shade.

Anyway, the dainty, white blouse will always be a safe choice for any season. Nothing exceeds it for elegance and therefore it cannot lose the allegiance of women. For midsummer wear it is made in silk and cotton materials mainly, but fine sheer linen always figures among high priced models in the most authoritative displays.

A blouse of fine, cotton voile and one of crepe de chine chosen as representative of two good styles, are shown in the picture. Each shows pretty new touches—where experience of the season's tendencies lead us to look for them—in the sleeves and collar. These models are commendable from every standpoint.

The blouse of fine voile is made with two wide and a group of three narrow tucks at each side of the front and has a plain back. The rather full, plain sleeves are gathered into a deep cuff, having a panel of embroidered voile set in lengthwise. All seams are hemstitched and there was never anything of greater decorative importance than this hemstitching. The collar is cut to form a deep, square cape at the back and is extended into long tabs over the shoulder and narrow, square revers at the neck. A dainty pattern in embroidery appears on the revers, tabs and cape and narrow, heavy lace edging makes the finish for edges.

The tailored blouse of crepe de chine is so plain that it hardly needs description. Deep, two-piece cuffs flare at the wrists and large pearl buttons take care of the fastenings. Smaller buttons are used to make a consistently tailored finish for the collar and cuffs.

The Military Touch.

Smart little cone-shaped bunches of red and yellow wrinkled berries are pointed toward the heavens about the crown tip of a boat-shaped red milan turban. Gray novelty braid is made into a military turban with the high front turned back from the face and a sort of chain arrangement across the base in the front wrapped in gray metallized ribbon and connected at either side to the back by bands of gray georgette.

Steel beads are used for a smart ornament with a high spike of jet coming from the center and this is posed on a military turban of black-and-white novelty straw with the crown tip of white georgette.

Buttermilk Cleans Sponges.

Sponges that are sticky and clogged with soapy water may be cleaned by soaking for 24 hours in buttermilk; rinse thoroughly under the tap, first in warm, then in cold water; dry in a current of air.

Temperance Notes

SENTIMENT IN RUSSIA.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Neue Zuricher Zeitung, in a survey of the two years sobriety in Russia, quotes a representative of the duma as saying that "the very thought of the fearful consequences on the battlefield and in the country itself of a continuation of the alcohol regime makes every patriot shudder." The writer continues: "We are, therefore, more than overjoyed to know that it has been statistically proved that the daily producing capacity of the workingman, since the promulgation of that message of salvation, has been increased by 15 per cent, and that Monday, the day when millions of muzhik (farmers) were found in the gutters, has become a normal work day in Russia. But not only the mir (village community) felt the consequences; the life also in the city was as if of a sudden transformed. How quickly the population grasped the prospective benefits of the great reform is best shown by the fact that when it became known that the imperial ukase, in order to become legally valid, would need the express consent of the majority of the mirs, only an exceedingly low percentage refused the indorsement.

"Nobody has so quickly and completely grasped the import of the social revolution as woman, the greatest sufferer from the old alcohol curse. We are, therefore, not astonished to learn that as soon as the saloons were definitely closed the peasant women marched to the churches in Indian file to burn a candle each, thanking the Lord for the great delivery.

"When last spring the question of repermitting the sale of beer and red wine came up in the duma, Tarasov, a farmer-deputy, exclaimed: 'If the women would hear you they would pull you down from this platform.'"

A NEW YORK HOTEL MAN'S VIEW.

Mr. Frank Case, for 14 years proprietor of the Algonquin hotel, New York city, has closed his bar to stay closed. The fact is chronicled by the New York Times. Being asked "why" by a group of astonished friends to whom he made the announcement, Mr. Case pointed to a small boy crossing the hotel lobby with a bunch of school books under his arm. "There's one reason right there," he said. "That youngster is my own son, just coming home from school. I have decided that I don't want to pay his school bills and the other costs of bringing him up on the profits from booze. I guess that's my chief reason, but there are others.

"The large profits made by the bar, ($10,000 last year)," he went on, "made me sick. I had to admit to myself that I was a rumseller, and that is something I don't want to be. I am not posing as a reformer. I take a drink myself occasionally, but I don't want to sell it to another man. Would you want to?" Everybody said no, although there was not a total abstainer in the group.

TO MEMORIALIZE CONGRESS.

Speaking at a meeting of the Dry Chicago federation concerning the memorial to congress in behalf of national prohibition, ex-Governor Foss of Massachusetts said: "The memorial is cast in very radical terms, but it has won the support of most persons of great importance in the most conservative circles and in all walks of life. Professors of Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, heads of great railroad corporations, presidents of banks and leaders in the industrial and commercial world, as well as scientists and alienists, have signed this document. We think that both congress and the country will be astonished at the character of the signatures when they are published."

SIGNIFICANT ADS.

Saloons—Several first-class locations, for sale or rent. Apply United States Brewing company, 2519 Elston avenue.

The above advertisement is from the Chicago Tribune. Like the many other ads of the same nature, it is a pretty good indication of what the trade thinks about the "receding prohibition wave!" Also of the real opinion of saloon men as to whether or not prohibition prohibits.

A SAFETY MEASURE.

The new liability and compensation laws give the employer no option; he must pay for an injured workman, irrespective of the cause. If he tolerates alcohol-users on his premises, he must pay the cost of their mistakes. . . . As a result of these laws employers have installed safety appliances and started "safety campaigns." Their new rules against alcohol have precisely the same inspiration.—Harper's Magazine.

PROHIBITION BAD FOR BUSINESS.

Prohibition is bad for some kinds of business, and this fact must be admitted. It is bad for the business of loafing, bad for the fellow that runs a drunk cure establishment, bad for the fellow whose business is robbing drunks on the street, bad for the jailkeeper, bad for the bawdy house, bad for the wives who have formed the habit of being beaten up every Saturday night by a drunken husband, bad for the parasites who live off saloon keepers by permitting them to disobey the law.—Cole's Review.

NOTICE TO SICK WOMEN

Positive Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Bridgeton, N.J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weaknesses. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt a change for the better. I took it until I was in good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with such good results."—Mrs. MILFORD T. CUMMINGS, 322 Harmony St., Penn's Grove, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

Just as in Life.

Booth Tarkington said, in New York, the other day:

"The average man treats spiritualism as a joke. An illustrator found out recently that I was interested in the subject, so he mushed upon me with a story about a widow who tried to get in touch with her deceased husband.

"The medium, after a good deal of futile work, said to the widow:

"'The conditions this evening seem unfavorable. I can't seem to establish communication with Mr. Smith, ma'am.'

"'Well, I'm not surprised,' said the widow, with a glance at the clock. 'It's only half-past eight now, and John never did show up till about 3 a. m.'"

A Reminder.

"Everything I have asked you you have answered that you don't remember," said the lawyer to the colored witness.

"Yas, sah," came from the witness.

"What's that string around your finger for?"

"Dat string, sah?"

"Yes, that string."

"Oh, dat is t' remind me of somethin', sah."

"To remind you of what?"

"T' remind me to remember t' forget, sah."

Psychology of Strife.

"Are we going to undertake a war of ruthlessness?'

"I hope not," replied Senator Sorguhm. "I've seen many a fight of one kind and another and I have never known a bad conscience to operate as anything but a handicap."

"Why, you spoke for two hours and didn't advance a single idea," replied the toastmaster.

"Yes, but you cut me off too soon. I was coming to it."

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Kidney & Co.

(BY DR. J. H. WATSON)

The kidneys and the skin work in harmony. They're companions, the skin being the second partner. If we are anxious to keep well and preserve the vitality of the kidneys and, also, free the blood from noxious elements, we must pay special attention to a good action of the skin and to see that the kidneys are flushed so as to eliminate the poisons from the blood.

Sweating, by hard work or in a bath, at least once a week, helps to keep the skin and kidneys in good condition. Flush the kidneys by drinking plenty of pure water with meals and between meals. Occasionally obtain at the drug store Anuric, double strength, which will help flush the kidneys and the intestines. You will find that Anuric is many times more active than lithia and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 6

JESUS THE SERVANT OF ALL.

LESSON TEXT—John 13:1-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.—Mk. 10:44.

This lesson is really a continuation of the latter part of the lesson of last week, for the glory of Jesus is his unselfishness whereby he wrought out redemption for mankind.

I. Selfishness Amid Holy Surroundings (vv. 1-11). The world does not appreciate Jesus. It never has. "His own," the Jews, did not appreciate him. We are considering him today as he was about to depart from the world that had despised and rejected him to one that appreciated him (Heb. 1-6). The development. Verse 2 tells of the Satanic suggestion that came to the heart of Judas. In it was personal desire, and, connected with it, human conspiracy. The coming to this upper room has been pointed out by a man bearing a pitcher (Mk. 14:12-16), the pitcher being suggestive of the Holy Spirit which was about to come in the place of the visible Christ, and it is in the midst of such sacred surroundings as this that Satan enters the hearts of students. This is a suggestion as to the power of environment. Environment is an aid, but it does not produce effective safety. No moment is too holy for Satanic suggestion. Jesus knew that the hour was come when he was to depart out of the world. "Having loved his own, he loved them to the end." Even though the Father had given all things into his hands, still it was necessary for him to teach the disciples once more, and finally, the lesson of humility. He knew and remembered the strife among the disciples (Luke 22:24-28). Doctor Bonard's famous dream, analyzing seal as being made up of ambition, pride and elements other than the love of God is worthy of consideration in this connection. We need to realize the danger of selfishness even in our service for God. Have we examined our motives? If the consequences of our superiority, either of rank or ability, tempts us to shirk the lowliest of services, it is time for God's children to recall this scene, and remember that "the servant is not greater than his Lord." Peter's strong protest (v. 8) brings out the fact that the washing by Christ of the disciples' feet was deeper than merely the outward application of water (See Rom. 8:9).

II. Service, the Evidence of Divine Humility (vv. 12-15). (1) This service was tender. Jesus had all things (v. 3), yet he became the servant of all. (2) It was for all. All needed a washing. All the disciples needed to learn, and all servants must learn; to obey. (3) It signified sanctification. We are saved once for all, but we are constantly being stained by our contact with sin in the world; hence the need of renewed cleansing. New light reveals new need of cleansing. (4) It signified deity. Jesus read the thoughts of his disciples. He became their servant that in years to come they might know the meaning of service. He became their example, and in years to come they remembered his knowledge and service. (6) It was for "his own." The disciples did not know what it was he had done to them. Little do we understand oftentimes what it is the Lord has done to us. Jesus set them an example whereby he would remove the dirt of crime, self-seeking and every manifestation of selfishness from their sin-stained souls. We may call Jesus Lord and Master, and it is well that we do so, for Master and Lord he is indeed, but, if we call him so, let us not do aught than make him in our lives what we call him with our lips. The idea here emphasized has given rise to much religious literature. "The Imitation of Christ" by Thomas a'Kempis, is the most popular book in the world next to the Bible.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you" (v. 16). This introduction shows how important Christ considered his teaching at this point. "The servant is not greater than his Lord" (See Matt. 10:24; Luke 6:40; 22-27). If the Lord bent to this lowly service, certainly they, the servants, should not think it beneath them to do likewise, nor should the one that is sent (an apostle) consider himself greater than he that sent him. John, who wrote this epistle, was one of the apostles guilty of an unholy strife for power and position, and desirous of bringing fire down upon those who did not acknowledge and follow Jesus, but he became a marvel of love and tenderness.

Knowing and doing are the twin pillars of the Christian faith upon which the house of happiness is built. Such service is not egotistical.

It is this that has proved the superiority of Christianity over all the religions of the world.

If we seek to do service for others, then we have the right to call Jesus Master and Lord, but if we seek honor rather than to be humbly useful, we shall have no right to call him thus.

This instance made a deep impression upon Peter, as can be seen from the striking illusion in his first epistle (I Pet. 5:5 R. V.).

HOME LIFE OF THE BASS.

My Dear Buck:

You ask for a little info on the habits and home life of the black bass and when and where to find him. The bass, both large and small-mouthed, is a roamer, a lively, active hunter for the best place to gorge himself on the choice minnows, crawfish and helgamite, with a dessert from the surface of the water of moths, flies and frogs. He is a great little traveler, and soon becomes big chief of the waters in which he lives. With such a varied menu, you will find him ever ready for a fight, equally eager for fly-hook, trolling-spoon, live bait or plug, right on the job to put up a struggle that will test your skill. You can fish for him night or day as he is a 24-hour feeder, but early morning and late afternoon is the surest time to get him right. He is an active rogue and continually rising from the bottom to the surface, at times jumping above the water in pursuit of his feed. He changes his home and feeding ground as the season passes. In the spring he is found in the shallow water in the streams and rivers, below rapids and riffles, as the water warms up he moves to the deep pools lying alongside of windfalls and logs, rocky ledges and weedy spots. During the hot summer he migrates to greater depths where the water is cool. Likewise in the lakes, the bass are "at home," in the spring, in the shallowest places, lying off of the sand bars and gravel formation, you can count on a good catch, close inshore in the very low water. A little later when the weeds, lilies and reeds are well grown you will find him in that vicinity. Both the large and small-mouthed bass are often found in the same lakes, but in different localities. The small-mouth favors the stony bars or shoals varying in depth from two to forty or fifty feet, while the large-mouth prefers the weeds and muddy bottoms.

East Wind Not So Bad.

Weather conditions have been blamed since the time of Noah for an empty stringer or creel. Rainy days, pleasant days, all kinds of winds and especially an east wind have been cussed as the cause of "fisherman's luck." Remember this, the bass keeps on filling the feed-bag just the same, and an east wind is better than no wind at all. You will get more bass when the surface of the water is slightly ruffled by a breeze than when fishing on a clear still day. Last year, at the opening of the season in Wisconsin, Jim and I landed 19 fine large-mouth bass from a little bay in something less than an hour, one casting while the other held the boat off shore. There was quite a stiff east wind blowing and the surface of the water was broken by a continuous roll of small waves. The bass ranged from two and one-half to five pounds and were caught between five and six o'clock, after we had fished all day with very poor luck. These fish, Buck, were caught with a white Wilson wobbler with a red head and with a Jamison Coaxer plug.

Bass Have Keen Sight.

While playing the game, don't for a minute forget that a bass has eyes, and he sure knows how to use them. Once he lamps you, your bait or lures are not for him, he has moved to other quarters. Don't stand in the boat and open up with a personally conducted sightseeing tour before you cast. He also hears, and often you will think that he is exceptionally keen in both of these senses. While in a boat bear in mind that sound vibrations carry farther in the water than you cast, and under water sounds mean a frightened fish. Save useless casts in a pool from which the fish have vamoosed, don't telegraph the bass before inviting him to come in out of the wet.

A bass will always gorge his food, but there is quite a difference in his mouthing of baits. If you are fishing with live bait, a minnow, crawfish or frog, he will strike without much force and will mull the bait around in his mouth a bit before swallowing it, in fact with a live minnow he will turn it around in his mouth and swallow it headfirst. In this case do not strike him too quickly, but give him a little time to play the bait before striking. A bass handles a live bait somewhat similar to the play of a cat with a mouse it has caught. Many a time I have torn a minnow in half through striking too soon, having the pleasure of baiting again instead of landing the bass that had a half hold on my bait. If you are using a wooden minnow or plug, however, strike quickly right after the bass strikes, as he immediately discovers that it is not a choice morsel of food, and disconnects.

SAYS PILE REMEDY WORTH $100.00 A BOX

I have had itching piles ever since my earliest recollection. I am 53 years old and have suffered terribly. I have tried many remedies and doctors, but no cure. About 8 weeks ago I saw your ad for Peterson's Ointment. The first application stopped all itching, and in three days all soreness. I have only used one 25c box and consider I am cured, not feeling any return of the trouble for 6 weeks. You have my grateful heartfelt thanks, and may everyone that has this trouble see this and give your ointment, that is worth a hundred dollars or more a box, a trial. Sincerely yours, A. Newth, Columbus, O.

Obituary

Mrs. Ella Thomas, who was taken to the Garrett hospital Thursday, died early the following morning. The doctors expected to amputate her left limb, but her conditional was so critical that the operation was not performed. She is survived by two sisters—Mrs. Jackson, residing near Auburn; and Mrs. Chamberlain, of Waterloo. Funeral services were held at the Newville Christian church, Elder Fred Thomas, of Toledo, officiating. Interment was at Evergreen cemetery. She moved to this place last fall, after selling her farm, southwest of town, where she was born and passed nearly 66 years of her life. She came to town, she said, to take comfort and rest from hard work, but she was stricken with a disease from which she could not recover.

Clerk DeKalb Circuit Court.

NAMED AS BOARD FOR CONSCRIPTION

Sheriff Frank Baltz, Clerk Walter Mountz and I. M. Zent to Serve in DeKalb County.

AT INDIANAPOLIS ON MONDAY

Appointments Made by Telegraph in Every County in Indiana Saturday Night Following Passing of Conscription Act.

The three members of the conscription board in DeKalb county, Sheriff Frank Baltz, County Clerk W. W. Mountz and I. M. Zent of Auburn, named by Governor James P. Goodrich Saturday night following the passing of the conscription bill by both houses of Congress at Washington, left early Monday morning for Indianapolis for a conference with Governor Goodrich.

At the meeting the board members will be instructed in detail as to their duties and will be told to be ready to act upon notice from the governor or some other designated state official. Just when the registration will be made is unknown. Each county board must make arrangements for the registration in precincts, and men failing to register on the date set probably will be subject to heavy penalties.

The following is the telegram received Saturday night by each of the DeKalb county members of the board: "I have appointed you as a member of the conscription board of three from your county. You are earnestly requested to attend a meeting of the members of all such committees at the executive chamber in the state house on Monday afternoon, April 30." James P. Goodrich, governor.

In each county in the state of Indiana three men were appointed, the sheriff, clerk and a private citizen being named. The boards are nonpartisan. The action of the governor is said by state officials to place Indiana first among the states to take steps for the immediate carrying out of the terms of the army bill.

Governor Goodrich has been keeping in close touch with the progress of the bill and soon after the vote on the volunteer amendment in the House Saturday afternoon, he began to prepare telegrams to the county board members.

Here is what the conscription law designates:

1. The president will designate by proclamation a day of registration, the voting precinct being used as the smallest unit for enrollment. The governors of the various States will be asked to have the sheriffs of the counties appoint registers to take the names of all males between the ages of twenty-one and an age yet to be determined upon by congress. The house bill calls for 19 to 40 and the senate 19 to 27. Those who refuse to enroll will be arrested.

Those who refuse to enroll will be arrested.

2. The State officers will exempt from military service "persons engaged in industries, including agricultural, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment or the effective operation of the military forces, or the maintenance of national interests during the emergency."

3. Those not exempted will be reported to the War Department, which will make further exemptions.

4. It is estimated that by August 1 the 500,000 men desired will be in training camps. In the meantime the Government must provide equipment for the recruits.

5. It is estimated that the registration will result in an enrollment of 7,000,000, and about 40 per cent of this number will be weeded out on account of physical disabilities. The 500,000 to be selected from the remaining 60 per cent will be chosen by lot.

To Serve Without Pay.

Indianapolis, April 30.—Members of county conscription boards named by Governor Goodrich to take a census of all men of the state under the provisions of the greater army bill passed by congress, met Monday afternoon for a conference regarding their work. The meeting was held in the house of representatives' chamber, starting in the late afternoon.

Previous to the meeting, a conference of mayors of the larger cities which will have a special conscription board, was held with the governor in connection with choosing the personnel of the board. The governor appointed members of the county and Indianapolis boards only, in his first announcement.

The members of the boards in most cases, are the sheriff, county clerk and a leading resident. The boards are divided politically, usually the sheriff and county clerk belonging to one party and the leading resident to the other.

Regulations for carrying on their work, was planned at the meeting. The boards will appoint a registrar for each precinct in the county. The registrars will probably be paid for their work, although members of the conscription boards will serve without pay.

GARRETT SALOON BROKEN INTO AND ROBBED

The Millikin saloon was broken into sometime early Sunday morning and several quarts of whisky and a quantity of cigarettes taken. The thief or thieves also entered a pool room next morning and the Clark meat market where some meat was taken. Sheriff Frank Baltz was called but as yet has been unable to locate the thieves.

FOUR MARRIAGE LICENSES GRANTED SATURDAY MORNING

The marriage license business in the office of County Clerk W. W. Mountz Saturday morning showed a big increase, four licenses being granted. These were the first that have been issued this week. They are as follows:

E. V. Kiplinger, 37, farmer, Waterloo, and Miss Edna L. Duesler, 31, housekeeper, Auburn.

Ivan E. Lyons, 22, farmer, Fairfield township, and Miss Rhea M. High, 17, DeKalb county.

W. F. Damman, 24, letter carrier, Fort Wayne, and Miss Hazel Whetzel, 21, DeKalb county.

Robert B. Merts, 27, school teacher, DeKalb county, and Miss Esther E. Hartman, 24, teacher, DeKalb county.

SEVEN MARRIAGE LICENSES ISSUED SATURDAY

Saturday was one of the busiest days the marriage license department in the county clerk's office has seen for many years. Seven couples secured licenses during the day, four during the morning and three late Saturday afternoon.

The three securing licenses late Saturday afternoon were:

Harold E. Brown, 24, tread builder, Auburn, and Bertha M. Sebring, 23, Auburn.

Wilber Barton, 23, laborer, DeKalb county, and Mary Smith, 23, employed at Auburn Post Card factory, Auburn.

Floyd Coburn, 29, farmer, DeKalb county and Opal Miller, 28, music teacher, DeKalb county.

FIFTY-SEVEN CITIES ARE ORGANIZING MILITIA COMPANIES

Fifty-seven cities in Indiana have started organization of new units of the national guard since the break with Germany, according to figures made public by Adjt. Gen. Smith Friday. Only a few of these, however, have been authorized and mustered into service.

The following units have been mustered into the guard; four troops of cavalry, two in Indianapolis, one at Evansville and one at New Albany; three batteries of artillery, one at Indianapolis; one at Bloomington and one at Fort Wayne; one battalion of engineers, two companies in Indianapolis and one at Terre Haute; one company of signal corps at Fort Wayne and one company of infantry at Rushville.

TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOLS PREPARE FOR GRADUATION

St. Joe High School has Six Graduates This Year and Spencerville High School Three—Only Township High Schools in DeKalb County.

Spencerville and St. Joe are the only two township high schools in DeKalb county. They are both very successful and this year are graduating nine young people.

Thursday evening of this week the Spencer township high school will hold its commencement in the Lutheran church at Spencerville, with Dr. Frank E. Jaynes to deliver the class address. The graduating class is composed of three young men, namely: Howard Shilling, Wellington Miller and Cecil Hollopeter.

While this class is few in number yet they have the record of being one of the most studious and well behaved classes of the school. The alumni banquet of this school will be served in the basement of the Lutheran church on Saturday evening.

Concord Has Six.

The Concord township high school at St. Joe sends out six young folks, three young ladies and three young men, as follows: Stanley Koch, DeVete Bayman, Herbert Curie, Alta M. Hull—Freeburn, Harvey Hull, and Lela Wallace. The class play, "Silas the Chore Boy," will be given Wednesday evening of this week.

The commencement address will be delivered by Dr. James H. Shaw of Bloomington, Ill., at the Widney opera house at St. Joe, Friday evening followed by an alumni banquet Saturday evening at the I. O. O. F. hall.

NEW OFFICERS FOR GRAND CHAPTER OF EASTERN STAR

Grand officers elected at the meeting of the Eastern Star which just closed at Indianapolis are as follows: Grand secretary, Mrs. Nettie Ransford of Indianapolis, re-elected for her twenty-fourth consecutive term; grand matron, Mrs. Ellis Smyser, Logansport; grand patron, Lincoln B. Cravins, Hammond; associate grand matron, Mrs. George Bardsley, Shelburn; associate grand patron, Hallard A. Flynn, Chesterton; treasurer, Mrs. Mamie Conrad, Warsaw; grand conductress, Mrs. Cora B. Holland, and associate grand conductress, Mrs. Jennie Ackerly, Frankfort.

LAST KILLING FROST IN DEKALB COUNTY MAY 10

The time of killing frosts in DeKalb county, giving the average dates from 1903 to 1912, are given in a bulletin just issued by the agricultural department of Purdue university at West Lafayette. The average date for the last frost in the spring in DeKalb county is May 10 and the first frost in the fall as an average date is October 5. The dates of frosts vary considerable in the many counties over the state of Indiana.

DEKALB COUNTY FARMERS GO TO LAFAYETTE

A delegation of DeKalb county farmers headed by County Agent A. Z. Arehart will leave Thursday, for Lafayette to attend the annual spring meeting of the Indiana Cattle Feeders' association to be held at Purdue university on Friday.

The experiment in cattle feeding at Purdue will be closed at this time and the results presented for discussion. Four lots of cattle are being used to test the most economical amount of corn to feed fattening cattle. One lot received a full feed of corn with silage, hay and cottonseed meal. Another lot received one-half as much corn as the full fed lot, while a third lot received no corn.

Still another lot received no corn the first month with a gradually increasing amount until the end of the feeding period. Four lots of cattle are being used for this purpose. Any person desiring to attend should notify County Agent Arehart.

SIGN BUT ONE PETITION

DEKALB COUNTY CITIZENS CANNOT PLACE THEIR NAMES ON MORE THAN ONE PETITION FOR A CONSTITUTIONAL DELEGATE

Name will Not be Counted if He Violates Law in This Manner—The Time is Approaching for Candidates to Announce Themselves.

As the time approaches when aspirants for the honor of constitutional convention delegate from DeKalb county will be out getting signatures to their petitions it is well to know that no one can sign more than one petition.

Acording to the act passed by the state legislature early this year relative to the election of delegates no elector may sign his name to more than one nominating petition for each office to be filled,

If an elector does sign more than one petition his name will not be counted on any of them. Following is a part of the act as it affects the contents of the petition:

"Sec. 5. Such petition shall contain a provision to the effect that each signer thereto pledges himself to support and vote for the candidates or candidate whose nomination is therein requested.

"Each elector signing a petition shall sign such petition in his own handwriting and shall add to his signature his place of residence in his own handwriting, (unless he cannot write and his signature is made by mark,) which shall include street and number where there is a street and number.

"No elector may sign his name to more than one nominating petition for each office to be filled; and where an elector has signed his name to more than one petition, his name shall not be counted on any of the petitions.

"Nothing herein shall be construed, however, to prevent more than one petition from being signed by the same person up to the number of members of the convention for whom he will be entitled to vote."

400 INDIANA UNIVERSITY GIRLS TO BE NURSES

The coeds of Indiana university are demonstrating to the people of the state that they are interested in the present crisis by the way they are responding to the call for nurses' training. At present 390 girls are taking the training.

The enrollment ended April 3, but it is probable that when the entire count is made, the number will reach the 400 mark. There are 700 girls enrolled in the university this semester, so that over half of the girls are taking the nurses' course. A number of girls are not taking the work for credit. A few faculty women are also taking the work.

GASOLINE MAY BE USED TO KILL DANDELIONS

To get dandelions out of the lawn or any place where they are undesirable, they should not be dug up, Frank N. Wallace, Indiana state entomologist, says. Digging them in the ordinary manner, by cutting the root a little below the surface of the ground, only results in more sprouting around the root. He says it is almost impossible to kill them this way.

The best, quickest, surest and easiest way to kill the dandelion, Mr. Wallace says, is to get a large oil can, similar to one a machinist uses, fill it with gasoline and then squirt about a teasponful of the liquid into the crown of the plant. That will kill the dandelion quickly and for all time, Mr. Wallace declares.

FAIRVIEW FARM CLUB ELECTS TOWNSHIP CHAIRMAN

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Fairview Farm club was held in the school house a mile north of Concord Friday night. The main discussion was on "Corn." This was handled by the men. "Poultry" was what the ladies talked about. This was a very lively discussion.

A part of the business of the evening was the election of a township chairman, H. A. Pond of St. Joe. Mrs. Hattie Widney of the same place was elected secretary-treasurer. County Agent A. Z. Arehart was present and took part in the discussion conducted by the men. The Rehobeth church male quartet furnished some good music.

This club holds their meetings monthly and have had some very interesting gatherings. There are two clubs in Concord township, the other one being near St. Joe. There are now six townships organized in DeKalb county—Fairfield, Richland, Smithfield, Newville, Concord and Spencer.

Happenings of the World Tersely Told

U. S.—Teutonic War News

Lieut. Bruce R. Ware, U. S. N., commander of the Mongolia's gun crew, declared at London his belief that the one shot his men fired April 19 at a German sumbarine did not sink the U-boat.

Reports that the German submarine blockade is becoming more and more efficient were given serious attention at the cabinet meeting at Washington and most of the discussion was directed toward supplying quickly as many ships as possible to carry supplies to the entente.

The allies' war commissioners outlined to American officials at Washington the exact conditions in Europe with respect to shipping, food and other necessary supplies. No words were minced in declaring that European nations were facing a famine with 20,000,000 men withdrawn from economic fields for fighting. Food, money, transportation facilities, steel and oil were emphasized as the paramount needs.

The president informed M. Rene Viviani, head of the French mission at Washington, that the United States would see the war through to a victorious end. The president also congratulated Marshal Joffre upon his shining military achievements and Vice Admiral Chocheprat upon the splendid work performed by the French navy. M. Viviani made an eloquent address setting forth France's appreciation of the unselfish action of the United States in coming to the assistance of the French people.

The destruction without warning by submarine gunfire of the American schooner Percy Birdsall of New York was reported to the state department at Washington.

Captain Rice of the American steamship Mongolia, which arrived at a British port, said that the Mongolia had fired the first gun of the war for the United States and sunk a German submarine. The naval gunners on board made a clean hit at 1,000 yards. The periscope was seen to be shattered.

Twenty steamships, runners of Germany's submarine blockade, arrived in the U. S. and thus made available about 60,000 tons of space for cargo awaiting means of transportation to Europe. Four of these vessels are among the largest merchantmen afloat.

Lieut. William F. Gresham, U. S. N., and 11 American bluejackets, survivors of the American armed steamship Aztec, destroyed on April 1 by a German submarine, arrived in the United States from a foreign port. Lieutenant Gresham declined to discuss the sinking.

* * *

The French commission has safely landed in the United States. The commission arrived in Washington on board the presidential yacht Mayflower from Hampton Roads. The commission, which includes Marshal Joffre and former Premier Viviani, arrived on board a speedy steamship of the French line, which was convoyed across the Atlantic.

Mexican Revolt

Official advices to the state department at Washington said the Mexican government had warned Germans in Mexico that any concentration of Germans near the American border would be followed immediately by their arrest.

* * *

Domestic

A nation-wide movement to enlist all women and children in the food production campaign was set afoot at Washington by the board of managers of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher associations.

Shipping totaling 4,931,191 cargo tonnage and paying tolls of $3,673,233 for the year, passed through the Panama canal in 1916, it was officially reported at Washington.

C. B. Post, county agricultural agent of Wisconsin, started to seize all potatoes necessary for seed. He has been ordered to do this by C. P. Norgord, state commissioner of agriculture. "The people cannot hold the potatoes for higher prices," said Mr. Post. "They will be taken and distributed where needed."

* * *

Minnesota's public safety commission ordered all saloons, pool halls and motion-picture houses in certain sections of Minnesota closed, as its first war measure.

* * *

Senator Frank Raguse, Milwaukee Socialist, was expelled from membership in the Wisconsin senate at Madison, Wis., for contempt, disorderly behavior and conduct unbecoming a senator of Wisconsin, in making a disloyal statement on the floor of the senate last Tuesday evening. The vote on the expulsion was 30 to 3.

Washington

Abdul Hak Hussein Bey, charge of the Turkish embassy at Washington, has appealed to the state department not to compel him to leave the country, giving as his reason the health of his wife. The government granted his request.

That someone American—possibly Herbert Hoover, or Secretary of Labor Wilson—within the next few months will become food dictator of the world was indicated by developments at the international war conference of the allies at Washington.

Following an hour's conference between President Wilson and Elihu Root at the White House in Washington it was admitted in official circles that the former secretary of state had accepted the chairmanship of the commission that soon will go to Russia.

Preliminary reports to the treasury department at Washington upon which Secretary McAdoo will base his recommendations to the president as to the size of the first bond issue under the $7,000,000,000 war finance law, indicate that the United States will be called upon to finance the allies to the extent of at least $400,000,000 and possibly $500,000,000 a month.

Secretary McAdoo handed the British ambassador at Washington a treasury warrant for $200,000,000, the first loan made to an entente government by the United States under the $7,000,000,000 war finance measure.

Food conditions in several of the nations of the entente allies have been reported to the American government at Washington as critical. The entire weight of the administration is being thrown behind the recommendations of Secretary Houston to congress to strengthen the government machinery for controlling the food situation.

Dunkirk was bombarded by German destroyers. British and French patrol ships engaged the Germans, one of the French torpedo boats being sunk, according to an official announcement made at Paris.

PROBLEM OF FARM LABOR GREAT ONE

Question Subject of Conference Between Gov. Goodrich and State Food Inspector.

FEDERAL EXPERTS TO AID

Important That Sufficient Help Is Secured to Insure the Safety of the Big Crops to Be Raised in the State.

Indianapolis.—How to handle the farm labor problem was discussed at a conference between Governor Goodrich and G. I. Christie, state food director, at the office of the governor. The National Council of Defense and the department of agriculture at Washington, D. C., have called on the governors of all states to try to work out a solution that will take care of the general situation and assure the safety of the farm and food crops that will be raised in the country this season.

Mr. Christie received a telegram from the department of agriculture directing him to proceed at once with the organization of a campaign and the working out of a plan for taking care of the labor problem in this state.

The government has had three agricultural experts at work in Indiana for a long time as farm visitors. It is their duty to visit farmers all over the state and give them all information that they can impart with reference to improved farm methods and to gather information from the farmers in regard to agriculture in the state.

To Add Them to Staff.

The department directed Mr. Christie to take these three men and add them to his staff and they will help him work out a solution to the labor situation. On receipt of the message Mr. Christie wired the department that he already was at work on this matter, and that he would go ahead at once and carry out the instructions of the department. Within a few hours thereafter another telegram was received from the department asking him for his plans for this work, and he explained them by telegraph.

The story of this exchange of telegrams emphasizes that Indiana leads the department of agriculture and the entire country, in fact, in the matter of efforts to increase food crop production. The department desired Mr. Christie's plan of operations at once. It was evident that he was one of the few state food directors in the country who was ready with a definite plan in an attempt to solve the farm labor problem.

Inheritance Tax Returns.

The report of Albert Humke, state inheritance tax appraiser, for the first three months of this year, has been filed with Governor Goodrich by members of the state board of tax commissioners. It includes the official reports of inheritance taxes paid by the estate of James Whitcomb Riley. The poet's estate was taxed a total of $4,625.12.

The total inheritance tax collected during the quarter ending March 31, 1917, was $165,629.18. The largest tax collected was from the estate of Raphael Kirshbaum of Marion county, a total of $22,226.93. The next highest amount was paid in by the heirs of William E. Haney, who died in Cass county. This total was $14,624.16. Other large sums paid in were: J. Wood Wilson's estate, Grant county, $8,256.33; Katherine Heinderlider, Jackson county, $4,107.77; Eugene Hack, Knox county, $2,411.39; Harry J. Milligan, Indianapolis, $9,607.19; Addison C. Harris, Indianapolis, $3,934.11, and Alfred L. Bernardin, Vanderburg county, $4,560.

Marion county paid in a total of $50,171.20 in inheritance taxes during the quarter. Other counties paying large total amounts were: Cass, $15,930.15; Elkhart, $4,961.80 (in which the largest sum was from the estate of Perry L. Turner, $4,502.50); Grant, $10,070.53; Laporte, $1,308.50; Madison, $5,009.70; St. Joseph, $3,251.53; Vanderburg, $8,961.91; Vigo, $4,067.05; Wayne, $2,200.85; Miami, $1,299.02.

Goodrich Joins Dry Move.

Governor Goodrich will personally urge Indiana representatives in congress to support a bill to prohibit the manufacture of liquor during the war. He has given his support to such a movement started by Governor Capper of Kansas and will be in Washington in a few days.

May Confiscate Land.

Following complaints from Crawfordsville that a wealthy farmer named Binford has refused to rent his 300 acres of fertile land for less than $30 an acre, Governor Goodrich instructed Walter Breaks of Crawfordsville, member of the state board of agriculture, to investigate.

Woman's League Elects Officers.

Mrs. Richard E. Edwards of Peru was elected president of the Woman's Franchise league of Indiana. First vice president, Mrs. J. S. Barnhill, Indianapolis; second vice president, Mrs. Mabel Curry, Terre Haute; third vice president, Mrs. A. H. Beardsley, Elkhart; fourth vice president, Mrs. Isaac Born, Indianapolis; fifth vice president, Miss Ada Bush, Kentland; secretary, Mrs. Dora Bosart, Indianapolis; treasurer, Mrs. Charles Gill, Muncie. Over $1,500 was pledged to carry on the suffrage campaign of the league.

Food Army Begins Forward Drive.

Indiana's food army has begun to take the field. With home gardeners busy in every part of the state and county agents making preparations for intensive cultivation of farms, Hoosierdom has taken the first step to answer war's demand for a larger and more productive acreage.

David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture, says the state is further advanced in its plans for growing a wartime surplus of food than any other state. He made this statement in a telegram to G. I. Christie, state food director, as a comment on Mr. Christie's report about the efficiency of the organization of the state.

"It's not a paper organization," declared Mr. Christie. "County agents and Purdue university experts are at work. The people are helping them. A fine degree of co-operation has been established. State associations of all kinds are giving of their time and facilities willingly and eagerly."

Reaches All of State.

Working night and day since April 5, Mr. Christie has evolved an organization that reaches every part of the state. There is a military precision about the division of work. At the head are Governor Goodrich and the state committee on food production and conservation, with Mr. Christie as the field commander.

Associated with the state committee is Purdue university, which has the cooperation of the United States department of agriculture. Then come the county organizations, embracing better farming associations, granges, institutes and similar bodies. In 41 counties are county agents who are division commanders of the food army. Forty-one men have been sent from Purdue university to counties having no agricultural agents. Supplementing the work of these men are 29 vocational teachers of agriculture working under the department of public instruction. In addition to these are the supervisors of 50 boys' and girls' farm clubs in the state, all of whom are enlisted in the food army.

Garden associations have been perfected in 30 cities. There are 98 cities and 348 towns and villages in the state. In the latter communities organization work will be undertaken in large part by the county associations. By the end of this month garden associations will be formed in most of the cities.

Ten Per Cent Increase.

Mr. Christie estimated that Indiana's productive acreage will be increased by at least 10 per cent this year. Roughly, there are 22,000,000 acres in the state. Slightly more than half that total has been devoted to food production. The average crop distribution in recent years, according to Mr. Christie, is as follows: Corn, 5,000,000 acres; wheat, 2,500,000 acres; oats, 1,750,000 acres; potatoes, 750,000 acres; orchards and garden, 1,000,000 acres.

Benefit of Co-Operation.

Here's where the co-operation of other groups comes in. The Indiana Grain Dealers' association is busy at every one of its innumerable contacts with the great producing army of the state showing how vitally important it is that seed corn be sound and fertile. At Tipton a grain dealer is encouraging farmers to test every bushel of grain and is helping make the tests.

"Now come the implement man. This week the farm implement jobbers of the state agreed to hold public demonstrations in every city, town and hamlet in the state. They will get in touch with local dealers everywhere and corn planters will be set out conspicuously, while men familiar with the operation of the machines will show how to grade seed corn to prevent large or misshapen grains from clogging the planter. A large or misshapen grain riding around the feeding mechanism in the seed box may rob one or more hills of their seed. This year every hill must get its seed. At the proper time canning associations will be organized and a state-wide campaign will be begun to show how garden produce can be put away for winter use."

To Improve Fort.

Steps to obtain extensive improvements that must be made before Fort Benjamin Harrison is in proper condition to accommodate the 40,000 or more troops that will be quartered there beginning this summer were taken by L. O. Hamilton, who has been designated to attend to these preliminaries. The needs as outlined by the federal government and made almost a condition on which the great camp will be established here are the following:

A direct road from Indianapolis to the post, improved so that heavy hauling will be possible at all times.

An ample supply of water.

Increased railroad facilities to take care of the supply and troop trains that will be arriving or departing constantly.

To solve these problems Adjutant General Smith and Mr. Hamilton went to the post to look over the situation, and Mr. Hamilton began immediately his overtures to obtain all the improvements requested by the government.

May Have State Organization.

So many towns and cities wish to organize Red Cross Units, and so many inquiries for information concerning the activities of the organization are made that William Fortune, president of the Indianapolis Red Cross, is in conference with the National Red Cross officers regarding the establishment of an Indiana unit of the national organization. At the present time the Indianapolis branch of the American Red Cross society is by far the largest, strongest and most active unit in the state of Indiana.

DRAFT BILL WINS; UP TO PRESIDENT

OPPONENTS OF MEASURE OVERTHROWN BY THE FORCES OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

VOTE IS ALMOST UNANIMOUS

Supporters of Volunteer Plan Were Astounded at the Tremendous Strength Developed by the Administration.

Washington, April 30.—Administration forces overthrow opponents of selective conscription in the senate and house and the bill went through by large majorities.

In the house the supporters of the volunteer plan were astounded at the tremendous strength developed by the administration forces. When the members lined up to pass the tellers it looked almost as if the whole house was about to vote for conscription. Chairman Dent of the military committee heading the volunteer forces finally gave up counting the votes.

The debate was begun by Senator Harding of Ohio in support of the administration bill and also his amendment to permit Colonel Roosevelt to raise four divisions of volunteers for immediate service abroad. He said the amendment was not to be misconstrued as inimical to the general conscription.

"It does not underestimate the impressiveness of our deliberate preparation of an army of a million men," he said, "while laying the foundation of 10,000,000 more, if need be, to say that an immediate force of American volunteers would put new life in every allied trench and a new glow in every allied campfire on every battle front in Europe."

Lodge Backs Roosevelt Plan.

Senators Curtis (Rep.) of Kansas and Smith (Rep.) of Michigan also indorsed the Roosevelt plan. Senator Lodge spoke at length in its favor.

"I can see no reason why men over twenty-five who earnestly desire to fight for their country in France, if physically fit, should not be permitted to offer their lives, if they want to. It cannot injure the principle of universal compulsory service," said Senator Lodge.

The one man who would be able to raise these divisions alone would be Colonel Roosevelt. He is known in Europe as is no other American. His presence there would be a help and encouragement of the soldiers of the allied nations.

Says Joffre Would Favor It.

"Marshal Joffre, if he could express an opinion, would favor the Roosevelt expedition.

"It is impossible for me to conceive why the administration or congress should refuse to Colonel Roosevelt and his volunteers the opportunity to give their lives to their country if they so desire. Colonel Roosevelt does not seek the command unless as a subordinate officer. It is not personal self-seeking. For heaven's sake, is there any reason why he should not be given an opportunity, if he desires, to give his life for what he regards as the most sacred of all causes?"

Senator Stone of Missouri suggested that Former Governor Sulzer of New York also desired to raise a division.

"If any man by his own personal influence or weight in his community can raise a division under this amendment," Senator Lodge replied, "I shall be glad to see him do it."

Wouldn't Let Roosevelt Lead.

Senator Williams of Mississippi said he favored allowing Colonel Roosevelt to recruit a volunteer expedition, but not to command it.

"He is competent to command a regiment, but by no means a division," said Senator Williams. "I should like to see him there, but not as commander in chief. I also should like to see 10,000 American regulars there; they would show those European folks something, just as the Canadians have. I have no personal objections to Colonel Roosevelt's going."

Registering his approval of conscription Senator Williams said he favored it, for one reason, because it will "weed out disloyal from loyal Americans."

"There are 1,000,000 traitors in America, including a considerable number of German spies," he said. "I want to weed out that element. If they resist the draft they will be interned."

SWEDES TO ASK FULL VOTE

Better Wages and Eight-Hour Day Also to Be Demanded, Says Socialist Leader.

London, April 30.—Reuter's Stockholm correspondent says Hjalmar Branting, the socialist leader, notified the premier in the riksdag Friday of his intention to ask whether the government was prepared to revise the constitution by abolishing the present unjust method of communal elections and to introduce universal equal direct suffrage for men and women in elections for the second chamber. The notification was greeted with loud cheering.

Another socialist notified the premier of an impending question with reference to workmen's demonstrations and as to whether the government purposes to take immediate steps to satisfy workmen by granting them better wages and an eight-hour day.

STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich, by proclamation, has set aside Monday, May 7, as Lafayette day in Indiana. This in tribute to a man who, during an eventful life, championed the cause of liberty in two hemispheres. The proclamation answers the call of a group of Indiana patriots, who believe that now is the time for Indiana to show its deepest gratitude to France, to France war stricken and, in many parts, impoverished. The call is to the people of the Hoosier state to rise and, with fine generosity, repay in money and service the great debt the republic owes France for having given this country Lafayette. France needs help now.

Hammond.—George R. Knott has been elected president of the board of education.

Brazil.—Sheriff Wallace has appointed six deputies to protect the Tidewater Pipe line which passes through the southern part of Clay county.

Marion.—Wilbur M. Serviss, sixty-five, manufacturer, is dead.

Laporte.—Jack B. Kelly, thirty-four, under arrest charged with robbing Michigan Central fast freight trains of butter.

South Bend.—Julius Depotter's night shirt caught on the bed when he was trying to escape from a fire and he was suffocated.

Rochester.—The Farmers' and Merchants' association of Fulton county formed as successor to the Commercial club.

Danville.—County forum for study of constitutional problems formed here.

Orleans.—Employees have raised a flag on the Monon station here.

Michigan City.—Roundhouse and shop employees of Michigan Central road given 2 cents an hour raise.

Franklin.—Ray Sellers has been elected president of the chamber of commerce.

Shelbyville.—The Shelby county courthouse will be remodeled and enlarged under the direction of Marion Boes.

Evansville.—High prices have forced George Swiekhard out of the bakery business.

Burket.—Secret service men asked to investigate the egging of the American flag here.

Gary.—Black soil is at premium here selling at $2 per cubic yard.

KAZAN

KAZAN ONCE MORE PERFORMS A GREAT SERVICE AND WINS JOAN'S LIFE-LONG AFFECTION.

Synopsis.—Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves the life of Thorpe, his master, and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even Thorpe is afraid to touch Kazan, who has been made savage by brutality, but Isobel, the dog's new mistress, wins his affection instantly. On the way northward, McCready, a dog team driver, joins the party and at night beats the master to insensibility and attacks Isobel. Kazan kills McCready, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader, takes a mate, Gray Wolf, and soon afterward drives off the pack which had attacked Pierre, a sick man, his daughter, Joan, and her baby. Kazan submits to adoption through kindness. Pierre is near death.

Kazan's alert eyes saw Pierre start suddenly. He rose from his seat on the sledge and went to the tent. He drew back the flap and thrust in his head and shoulders.

"Asleep, Joan?" he asked.

"Almost, father. Won't you please come—soon?"

"After I smoke," he said. "Are you comfortable?"

"Yes. I'm so tired—and—sleepy—"

Pierre laughed softly. In the darkness he was gripping at his throat.

"We're almost home, Joan. That is our river out there—the Little Beaver. If I should run away and leave you tonight you could follow it right to our cabin. It's only forty miles. Do you hear?"

"Yes—I know—"

"Forty miles—straight down the river. You couldn't lose yourself, Joan. Only you'd have to be careful of airholes in the ice."

"Won't you come to bed, father? You're tired—and almost sick."

"Yes—after I smoke," he repeated. "Joan, will you keep reminding me tomorrow of the airholes? I might forget. You can always tell them, for the snow and the crust over them are whiter than on the rest of the ice, and like a sponge. Will you remember—the airholes—"

"Yes-s-s—"

Pierre dropped the tent-flap and returned to the fire. He staggered as he walked.

"Good night, boy," he said. "Guess I'd better go in with the kids. Two days more—forty miles—two days—"

Kazan watched him as he entered the tent. He laid his weight against the end of his chain until the collar shut off his wind. His legs and back twitched. In that tent where Radisson had gone were Joan and the baby. He knew that Pierre would not hurt them, but he knew, also, that with Pierre Radisson something terrible and impending was hovering very near to them. He wanted the man outside—by the fire—where he could lie still, and watch him.

In the tent there was silence. Nearer to him than before came Gray Wolf's cry. Each night she was calling earlier, and coming closer to the camp. He wanted her very near to him tonight, but he did not even whine in response. He dared not break that strange silence in the tent. He lay still for a long time, tired and lame from the day's journey, but sleepless. The fire burned lower; the wind in the tree tops died away; and the thick, gray clouds rolled like a massive curtain from under the skies. The stars began to glow white and metallic, and from far in the north came faintly a crisping, moaning sound, like steel sleigh runners running over frosty snow—the mysterious monotone of the northern lights. After that it grew steadily and swiftly colder.

Tonight Gray Wolf did not compass herself by the direction of the wind. She followed like a sneaking shadow over the trail Pierre Radisson had made, and when Kazan heard her again, long after midnight, he lay with his head erect, and his body rigid, save for a curious twitching of his muscles. There was a new note in Gray Wolf's voice, a wailing note in which there was more than the mate-call. It was The Message. And at the sound of it Kazan rose from out of his silence and his fear, and with his head turned straight up to the sky he howled as the wild dogs of the North howl before the tepees of masters who are newly dead.

Pierre Radisson was dead.

CHAPTER IX.

Out of the Blizzard.

It was dawn when the baby snuggled close to Joan's warm breast and awakened her with its cry of hunger. She opened her eyes, brushed back the thick hair from her face, and could see where the shadowy form of her father was lying at the other side of the tent. He was very quiet, and she was pleased that he was still sleeping. She knew that the day before he had been very near to exhaustion, and so for half an hour longer she lay quiet, cooing softly to the baby Joan. Then she arose cautiously, tucked the baby in the warm blankets and furs, put on her heavier garments, and went outside.

By this time it was broad day, and she breathed a sigh of relief when she saw that the storm had passed. It was bitterly cold. It seemed to her that she had never known it to be so cold in all her life. The fire was completely out. Kazan was huddled in a round ball, his nose tucked under his body. He raised his head, shivering, as Joan came out. With her heavily moccasined foot Joan scattered the ashes and charred sticks where the fire had been. There was not a spark left. In returning to the tent she stopped for a moment beside Kazan, and patted his shaggy head.

"Poor Wolf!" she said. "I wish I had given you one of the bearskins!"

She threw back the tent-flap and entered. For the first time she saw her father's face in the light—and outside, Kazan heard the terrible moaning cry that broke from her lips. No one could have looked at Pierre Radisson's face once—and not have understood.

After that one agonizing cry Joan flung herself upon her father's breast, sobbing so softly that even Kazan's sharp ears heard no sound. She remained there in her grief until every vital energy of womanhood and motherhood in her girlish body was roused to action by the wailing cry of baby Joan. Then she sprang to her feet and ran out through the tent opening. Kazan tugged at the end of his chain to meet her, but she saw nothing of him now. The terror of the wilderness is greater than that of death, and in an instant it had fallen upon Joan. It was not because of fear for herself. It was the baby. The wailing cries from the tent pierced her like knife-thrusts.

And then, all at once, there came to her what old Pierre had said the night before—his words about the river, the airholes, the home forty miles away. "You couldn't lose yourself, Joan." He had guessed what might happen.

She bundled the baby deep in the furs and returned to the fir bed. Her one thought now was that they must have fire. She made a little pile of birch bark, covered it with half-burned bits of wood, and went into the tent for the matches. Pierre Radisson carried them in a waterproof box in a pocket of his bearskin coat. She sobbed as she kneeled beside him again, and obtained the box. As the fire flared up she added other bits of wood, and then some of the larger pieces that Pierre had dragged into camp. The fire gave her courage. Forty miles—and the river led to their home! She must make that, with the baby and Wolf. For the first time she turned to him, and spoke his name as she put her hand on his head. After that she gave him a chunk of meat which she thawed out over the fire, and melted snow for tea. She was not hungry, but she recalled how her father had made her eat four or five times a day, so she forced herself to make a breakfast of a biscuit, a shred of meat and as much hot tea as she could drink.

The terrible hour she dreaded followed that. She wrapped blankets closely about her father's body, and tied them with babiche cord. After that she piled all the furs and blankets that remained on the sledge close to the fire, and snuggled baby Joan deep down in them. Pulling down the tent was a task. The ropes were stiff and frozen, and when she had finished one of her hands was bleeding. She piled the tent on the sledge, and then, half covering her face, turned and looked back.

Pierre Radisson lay on his balsam bed, with nothing over him now but the gray sky and the spruce-tops. Kazan stood stiff-legged and sniffed the air. His spine bristled when Joan went back slowly and kneeled beside the blanket-wrapped object. When she returned to him her face was white and tense, and now there was a strange and terrible look in her eyes as she stared out across the barren. She put him in the traces, and fastened about her slender waist the strap that Pierre had used. Thus they struck out for the river, floundering knee-deep in the freshly fallen and drifted snow. Halfway Joan stumbled in a drift and fell, her loose hair flying in a shimmering veil over the snow. With a mighty pull Kazan was at her side, and his cold muzzle touched her face as she drew herself to her feet. For a moment Joan took his shaggy head between her two hands.

"Wolf!" she moaned. "Oh, Wolf!"

She went on, her breath coming pantingly now, even from her brief exertion. The snow was not so deep on the ice of the river. But a wind was rising. It came from the north and east, straight in her face, and Joan bowed her head as she pulled with Kazan. Half a mile down the river she stopped, and no longer could she repress the hopelessness that rose to her lips in a sobbing, choking cry. Forty miles! She clutched her hands at her breast, and stood breathing like one who had been beaten, her back to the wind. The baby was quiet. Joan went back and peered down under the furs, and what she saw there spurred her on again almost fiercely. Twice she stumbled to her knees in the drifts during the next quarter of a mile.

After that there was a stretch of wind-swept ice, and Kazan pulled the sledge alone. Joan walked at his side. There was a pain in her chest. A thousand needles seemed pricking her face, and suddenly she remembered the thermometer. She exposed it for a time on the top of the tent. When she looked at it a few minutes later it was 30 degrees below zero. Forty miles! And her father had told her that she could make it—and could not lose herself! But she did not know that even her father would have been afraid to face the north that day, with the temperature at 30 below, and a moaning wind bringing the first warning of a blizzard.

The timber was far behind her now. Ahead there was nothing but the pitiless barren, and the timber beyond that was hidden by the gray gloom of the day. If there had been trees, Joan's heart would not have choked so with terror. But there was nothing—nothing but that gray, ghostly gloom, with the rim of the sky touching the earth a mile away.

The snow grew heavy under her feet again. Always she was watching for those treacherous, frost-coated traps in the ice her father had spoken of. But she found now that all the ice and snow looked alike to her, and that there was a growing pain back of her eyes. It was the intense cold.

The river widened into a small lake, and here the wind struck her in the face with such force that her weight was taken from the strap, and Kazan dragged the sledge alone. A few inches of snow impeded her as much as a foot had done before. Little by little she dropped back. Kazan forged to her side, every ounce of his magnificent strength in the traces. By the time they were on the river channel again Joan was at the back of the sledge, following in the trail made by Kazan. She was powerless to help him. She felt more and more the leaden weight of her legs. There was but one hope—and that was the forest. If they did not reach it soon, within half an hour, she would be able to go no farther. Over and over again she moaned a prayer for her baby as she struggled on. She fell in the snowdrifts. Kazan and the sledge became only a dark blotch to her. And then, all at once, she saw that they were leaving her. They were not more than twenty feet ahead of her—but the blotch seemed to be a vast distance away. Every bit of life and strength in her body was now bent upon reaching the sledge—and baby Joan.

It seemed an interminable time before she gained. With the sledge only six feet ahead of her, she struggled for what seemed to her to be an hour before she could reach out and touch it. With a moan she flung herself forward, and fell upon it. She no longer heard the wailing of the storm. She no longer felt discomfort. With her face in the furs under which baby Joan was buried, there came to her with swiftness and joy a vision of warmth and home. And then the vision faded away, and was followed by deep night.

What happens to Joan and her baby after she falls unconscious on the sledge is told graphically in the next installment.

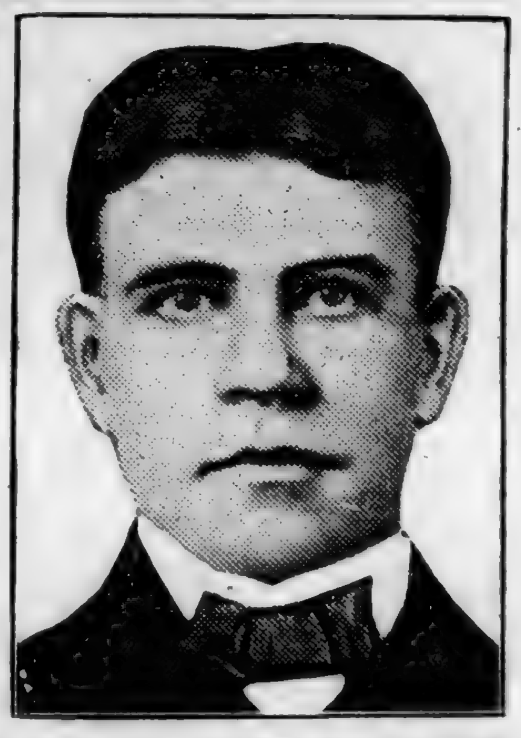
No Chance for Humorist.

Twenty-three thousand seven hundred and sixty-one persons tried to tell what love is, when a New Orleans paper held a prize answer contest on that subject recently. And then the prize went to this one: "Love is the doorway through which the human soul passes from selfishness into service and from solitude into kinship with all humanity!" Southerners are just that sentimental that the person who wrote "Love is what makes two auburn hairs grow where there was only one red one," probably got stung."—Springfield Republican.

MUNITION BOARD HEAD



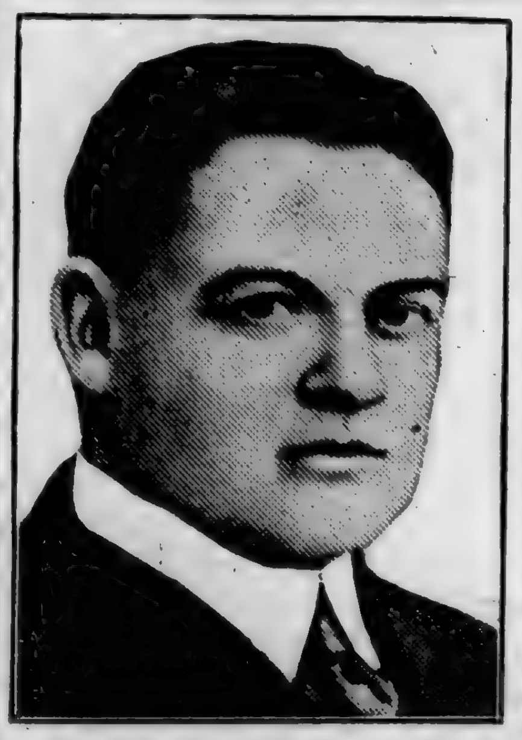
Creation of a general munition board was announced by the council of national defense. It will be headed by Frank A. Scott, a Cleveland manufacturer, and will be charged with supplying the army and navy with munitions and equipment. One of its chief functions will be to decide between the country's military and industrial needs.

The board's establishment puts into the hands of a group of army and navy officers and industrial leaders virtually the same task given the British minister of munitions. It creates machinery for a government department of munitions with its head a cabinet minister, if conduct of the war brings the need. Active military and naval participation in the conflict, many believe, will produce that necessity.

Twenty men, sixteen of them army and navy officers, make up the board.

Scott is one of the country's leading experts on munition production. Other civilian members have had much to do with supplying the allies with supplies. Most of the army and navy members are experts on munition standards and manufacture. They were designated by departmental and bureau chiefs. The board will be expected to equip and arm forces called into service, said the defense council's announcement, with the least possible disarrangement of normal industrial conditions, or interference with shipments to the entente allies. It will study the country's manufacturing facilities and will establish precedence in army and navy orders.

FOOD COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN



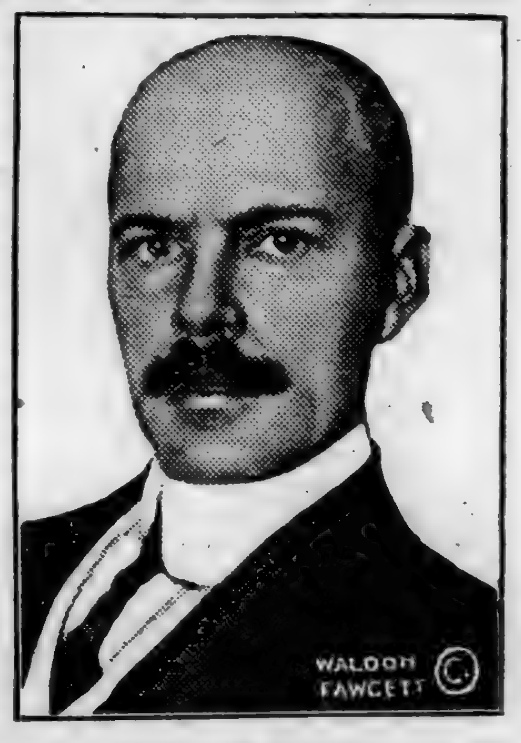
Herbert C. Hoover, who has been in charge of the Belgium relief work in London, has been called to direct the work of food production and food economy in this country—one of the problems facing the government since war has been declared.

After a meeting of the Council of National Defense it was formally announced that Mr. Hoover had accepted the chairmanship of a committee on food supply and prices. This committee will report to the council such experiences as European governments have had and advise "as to proper methods of preventing recurrence, as far as practicable, of the evils arising out of speculative prices, and to stimulate increased production of all food supplies."

Secretaries Redfield and Houston have written the chief manufacturers of tin cans, urging them to economize tin to insure as large a quantity of canned goods as possible. Department of commerce reports indicate that there will be a shortage of approximately 40 per cent in the tin supply of canned food next winter. Efforts are being made to increase tin importations from Singapore and Great Britain, and facilities are being rushed, it is said, for refining in this country tin ore imported from Bolivia.

Manufacturers of so-called nonperishable commodities, such as tobacco, cocoa and drugs, have been requested to substitute glass receptables or pasteboard cartons.

HAS IMPORTANT WAR POST



With military affairs as they are, we are fortunate in having such a man as Brigadier General G. O. Squier at the head of the signal corps, which includes the all-important aviation division. George Owen Squier is a native of Michigan. He graduated from the military academy in 1887 with high honors and later, at the direction of the war department, took a scientific course at Johns Hopkins university, being made a Fellow of the Institution in 1892. He was chief signal officer of the Third army during the Spanish-American war and was later charged with the work of laying cables between various islands in the Philippines, the work being undertaken at great risk owing to the hostility of the natives. For a time he devoted himself to the study of aeronautics and it was while he was on duty with the signal corps in Washington that he made his experiments connected with the "wired wireless," a technical discovery in telephony which was worth millions but the patents of which he gave to the nation. He was attached to the American embassy in London for nearly four years, was recalled about a year ago to succeed Col. Samuel Reber as chief of the aviation section of the signal corps and a few months ago, on the retirement of Brig. Gen. George P. Scriven became head of the signal corps, with the rank of brigadier general.

Notes on Clean-Up

After the yard—both front and back—is cleaned up, the lawn raked, the loose boards picked up and the tin cans and rubbish over at the dump, take a survey of what you have done. You will experience a feeling of satisfaction.

From the manner in which a majority of our citizens are taking hold of and cleaning up the streets and alleys, it deamonstrates a liking to be neat and clean.

Some fresh tobacco cans made their appearance on the streets and sidewalks this week. The Smart Alek so doing may be tapped on the shoulder and reminded that he is about the cutest little boy in St Joe.

From the noise, the housewives of St. Joe are doing considerable cleaning up on the inside. The rugs and cargets are surely getting theirs.

Spitting on the sidewalk is a filthy habit. It spreads disease and is contrary to law.

The fly season will soon be here. Keep garbage in closed receptacles. Swat every fly you see. They make business for the doctor and for the undertaker.

His Word Questioned

Rev. J. M. Harrington claims that his word has been questioned and his honor attacked by certain Hicksville parties relative to the arrest of a an alleged house breaker. The facts as given by him are as follows: While he and his wife were away from home last winter, their house, 3 miles north of Newville, was broken into and carpenter's tools and a tool chest were stolen. Suspicion attached to a neighbor just over the Ohio line. A search warrant was sworn out and the stolen goods found on the Ohio man's premises, all but the chest, parts of which were afterwards found hidden in a manure pile.

Rev. Harrington claims that certain Hicksville men sought to defeat justice by swearing to the good moral character of the accused. They also claim that the prosecution is a frame up caused by spite. This he denies. He says the action of the Hicksville parties is an attempt to get even with him for a crusade against illegal liquor dealers.

Everett Mavis and wife, of Hicksville, Ohio, spent Saturday night and Sunday with the latter's parents, Jacob Sechler and wife. Merritt Sechler took tkem home Sunday evening.

Baccalaureate Sermon

> And the Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest uuto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they may go forward. —Exodus xiv, 15.

The foregoing is the text employed by Rev. J. C. Coons at the baccalaureate sermon delivered by him at the M. P. church last Sunday evening. On occasions of this nature, a newspaper is often placed in an embarrassing position: it is expected to and must say something flattering wholly unwarranted by the facts; but, in this case, no such dilemma exists. THE NEWS can say—and truthfully, too—that the reverend gentleman's effort was fine, so fine that we would like to print it in full, which our limited space forbids.

The speaker began by describing the situation of the children of Israel when the Lord, through Moses, gave the command, "Go forward." They were hemmed in by obstacles—before them was the Red sea, behind them the army of Pharaoh and on either side insurmountable mountains. The divine command, "Go forward," Mr. Coons argued, is in keeping with the Lord's intention that man should not remain stationary, which is evidenced by the latter's "evident capacity and designedness for advancement. It is now seen and felt that progress is the central demand of the human spirit."

Speaking of man's greatness, Rev. Coons said: "In one of his psalms, David, speaking to Jehovah, says: 'When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and stars which thou hast ordained: What is man that thou art mindful of him and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him but little lower than God and crownest him with glory and honor!'" (Psa. viii, 3). This Biblical quotation served as the basis of extended argument to prove that man is the greatest of all God's creations—animate and inanimate, regardless of magnitude; that this superiority gives him kinship with his Maker.

"The aim of all education," the speaker argued, "is the attainment of personal power—power to understand and appreciate the past and power to shape the future;" and more is expected of each generation, as it has a greater past to shape its couse by. Hence, the necessity for preparation. The time spent in the school room is not wasted; and anxiety to enter into a profession or a trade, cutting short school work to do so, is often a fatal blunder. The case of Christ was cited. The Savior passed thirty years in preparation, while His work occupied but three years; but no one dare assert that His mission was a failure or His sacrifice in vain.

Purposeful effort, rightly directed, is needful to success, as a right purpose is evidence of a good character; and no permanent success can be attained by wrong principles. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." That is, a man's motives determines his real self—he can rise no higher than his ideals. Success is not limited to attaining high position, amassing wealth or winning renown, but by each one's doing his part, however limited, to the best of his ability and by the employment of proper methods.

Rev. Coons said that three forcees worked to carry the children of Israel across the Red sea: they were driven from behind by Pharaoh's army, and must advance or perish; they were forced to exercise initiative; they were lured on by desire to possess the Promised Land. These forces—necessity, volition and hope of reward—are necessary incentives to right living.

In conclusion, Rev. Coons said: "If we go forward masters of our powers—emancipated from the pride of half knowledge and the prejudices of half piety—if we have a clear vision and unflinching courage and are willing to work, it will be worth while. But this will not make us like our work and enjoy life. The person who goes about life conscientiously doing his duty is better than the one driven by necessity and is to be commended. But duty alone becomes a great burden. We pass from the task of duty to the joy of privilege when we get a vision of a Promised Land. Our life is made brighter and our toil lighter by the hope of the things of the future. One Promised Land is the ideal self. Get a vision of what you ought to be and do, of what God wants you to and be, and do your best to make that vision a reality. As you push out into life, take the lights of heaven for your guide. Look upwards for your light. The stars of truth in God's word is a needful help. God Himself, at your request, will take the helm of you life and guide you in the right direction. Secure yourself against any possible failure by taking Him as your counsellor and helper.

"Do not halt by the sea to perish. Do not be content with nature's push. Do not suppose you can move by will without divine inspiration from above. Our final hope of attainment is a vision of a Promised Land. In every extremity of life, in the face of every temptation of life, before every Red sea of difficulty, let us hear God's voice saying, 'Go forward;' and with quick response and with trusting hearts honor Him by pressing on. Be assured that the Kingdom sought is just beyond you. Press into it and take possessioe of it in the name of the Lord."

Rev. L. W. Spayd, of the Christian church, was present and assisted in the services. He read the Scripture lesson, the sixth chapter of First Timothy.

Just before the services began, the high school, preceded by Supt. F. L. Smith, entered and took seats reserved for them. The Seniors were arrayed in cap and gown and presented an attractive appearance.

The music was an interesting feature of the occasion. It was furnished by the M. P. choir.

The church was filled to its utmost capacity, evincing the interest the people of St. Joe and vicinity take in the school.

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 10, 1917 NO. 1

Them Lights Is "Bum"

Who hath woes? Who hath dejections? Who hath bruises unnumbered? He that walketh in St. Joe at night time. He that dependeth on Hicksville. Selah! --Slams xxiii, 13.

Them lights is "bum!" This expression is neither grammatical nor elegant; but so many brands of English—from profane to sulphuric—have been wasted on St. Joe's lighting system that good grammar has ceased to afford relief.

They say that nothing is in vain, but the man who can point out the exact place our lights occupy in the economy of public conveniences deserves a vote of thanks—he will have solved a more intricate problem than he who perfects a perpetual motion.

The man who buys a lottery tickets enjoys a brief period of hopeful anticipation, but the owner of a St Joe light is denied this pleasure. The owner of the lottery ticket generally gets nothing, but he does not know this for a time. On the other hand, the holder of a chance on getting light from Hicksville is never in doubt as to what is coming to him. All he has to do is to wait; and not very long either.

Exploring a back alley at night is a pastime of the man who enjoys novelty. It is like wading through a nocturnal layer cake: first comes a stratum of darkness and then one of light, the former representing the jelly and the latter the more substantial part. The drawback is that the jelly layers are apt to be too thick and conducive to over-emphatic language.

The lights are discouraging to the wrong doer or a spooning couple. When the lights are soldiering on the job, which is often enough to embolden them, the one may attempt to pull off an evil stunt or the others to taste the sweets that grow on each other's lips. Then, all of a sudden—bang! Just like that. The light springs out the darkness like a cat upon an unsuspecting mouse. No use for the one to try to assume an innocent air or the others a "'taint so" attitude.

When the lights are performing, they vary from the under study to a tallow candle to a star (of no very great magnitude).

If present conditions continue, the sinners of St. Joe will be beyond hope and saints may fall from grace.

Years ago, ague was a frequent (but not pleasant) pastime. The victim was sick every other day, and often sicker on the well day than on the sick one. So with our lights, they have their well periods and their sick periods. The remedy for ague was quinine—a bitter dose. It was taken before meals, after meals and between meals, in the morning and at bedtime; and in the night, mother would awaken and dose the family. St. Joe should administer a like bitter dose—better service or no pay.

DRY FEDERATION SENDS AN APPEAL TO PRESIDENT

Indiana Dry Workers Urge That Nation be Made Dry as a War Measure—Plans for Constitutional Delegates Made.

The Indiana Dry Federation Thursday sent an appeal to President Wilson, asking him to take some action that would bring the liquor question before the congress during the special session and make the United States "dry" as a war measure.

The appeal was made in a resolution adopted at a called meeting of the federation at Indianapolis.

The resolution set out that the federation had received word that the congress would take no action on the liquor question at the special session unless President Wilson so desired.

In view of this decision, the resolution set out, the appeal on behalf of "1,000,000 Indiana citizens" was made. The country should be "dry" during war time, the resolution said, for the benefit and preservation of the soldiers of the nation, both in and out of the trenches.

Details of the assistance that will be given each county unit in the fight to control delegates to the constitutional convention were worked out also at the meeting and it was announced that within two or three days a number of organizers would be sent to various counties.

It was decided that the state federation would make no attempt to name candidates for delegates to the constitutional convention, but that the county organizations would choose candidates. The state federation, it is planned, will assist in every way to elect these candidates.

It also was decided that no funds for the prosecution of the "dry" campaign, as mapped out, would be asked from churches. The church has been overworked in making subscriptions to similar enterprises, according to the decision, and money would be sought through campaigns of personal solicitation.

Commencement

SIX GRADUATE FROM THE CONCORD HIGH SCHOOL

Concord township has reason to be proud of the class graduated from her high school this year. They number but six. Quality is what counts, however; and a promising group of young womanhood and manhood faced the audience at the commencement exercises at Widney opera house, Friday evening. The best wishes of all go with them. They are DeVeta Bayman, Alta M. Hull, Lela Wallace Herbert D. Curie, Harvey J. Hull and J. Stanley Koch.

The exercises were opened by a chorus, "Uncle Sammy," by the high school, followed by the invocation by Rev. L. W. Spayd. After a second song, "The Army," the speaker of the evening, James H. Shaw, was introduced by Superintendent Smith.

It was easy to see that Mr. Shaw is a favorite with St. Joe people by the reception that was given him when he stepped forward to the center of the stage. After a few remarks relative to the war, to the needs of the American people (spiritual, mental and physical) and to the value of good books, particularly biography, he took up the subject he had chosen for the occasion, "Horace Mann and the Public Schools," a fit subject to discuss before a graduating class on the 121st anniversary of the birthday of the father of the present educational system.

In order that his hearers might better understand the character of Horace Mann, a resume of his early life was necessary. He was a native of Massachusetts, having been born on a farm. At the age of 13, his father died, and he and the remaining members of the family were left to eke out an existence from the sterile New England soil. Besides, his Christian experience was nearly wrecked by contending doubts on the doctrine of foreordination. He persevered, however, and fitted himself for college by studying at odd times. He entered Brown university, where he graduated with the highest honors. He began the practice of law in Boston, and soon enjoyed a lucrative practice.

But Horace Mann was a reformer by nature, as his later life proved, and in advance of his time. He favored prohibition, women's rights and the abolition of slavery; and an idea of his uncompromising integrity and courage can be gained by the fact that he defeated for re-election to the United States senate the idol of Massachusetts, Daniel Webster, because the latter surrendered to the slave holders to secure their support for the presidency.

But Horace Mann's greatest work was in connection with the public schools. At that time, they were attended by the children of the poor only. There were private institutions for the richer classes. This did not comport with his ideas of a democracy, and he set out to reform the educational system of his state. He secured the necessary authority at a salary, too, equal in amount to about half what he had been making as an attorney. His was a difficult task, for he was opposed by many clergymen and educators. He succeeded, and made the schools of Massachutts what they are today—democratic and attended by the children of poor and rich alike. His plan was adopted by other states, and he became the father of the present American school system.

The foregoing is an outline of Mr. Mann's work and character, as given by Mr. Shaw. His address contained many forceful illustrations and flashes of wit. He called attention to four needs of the public schools—more manual training and domestic science, longer terms, simplicity in dress by children of well-to-do parents. He complimented Indiana on her advanced position, particularly on centralized schools; and called attention to the fact that when Kentucky remodeled her system, she paterned after that of our own state.

In conclusion, the speaker paid a tribute to the school teachers: and as an example of the possibilities before them, cited the remarkable case of Helen Kellar. She is deaf, dumb and blind, yet she has been awakened and put into touch with the world about her.

The exercises closed with a tableau, "America, Here's My Boy." A large American flag hung just before the movie picture screen, concealing Floyd Reasoner, who was clad in khaki and bore the accoutrements of a soldier. The high chorus sang the stirring patriotic song after which the tableau was named; and each time the words, "America, Here's My Boy," were reached, "Old Glory" was raised, revealing the yonng soldier. The audiedce expressed favor by a round of applause. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. C. Coons.

Dr. Lida Leasure could not be present and present the diplomas to the class. This duty fell to Superintendent Smith. He spoke briefly, and then handed to each graduate the reward for four years' successful high school work.

The music was by the high school chorus, under the direction of C. A. Woodcox. They sang three songs—"Uncle Sammy," "The Army" and "Now the Day Is Over"—and, as heretofore stated, took part in the tableau. Miss Shordon was pianist.

There was a fair sized audience, notwithstanding the pleasant winter weather, but so large as it would have been under more favorable conditions.

Two samples of the work done by the manual training class were on exhibition, a pedestal and a sewing cabinet. The first was done by George Tustison and the second by Joseph Shull and Gerald Kinsey. No better work of the kind can be found anywhere, the polish, matching and carving being faultless. The material was taken from an old walnut feed box found in the Ben Hamilton. It was covered with the dirt of years, and labor was required to put it into shape.

Up-to-Date Coal Shed

The Steward Lumber & Grain company, of Spencerville, is making extensive improvements at the elevator in the shape of a new coal shed. It will be 20x108 and 20 feet high. The floor and side walls to the height of 4 feet will be of concrete. The coal will be handled by machinery. When completed, which will be about July 1, the company will have an up-to-date coal shed.

ARMY DRAFT LAW NOW IN EFFECT

War Department Issues Instructions for the Guidance of Officials Concerned.

GOVERNORS TO HAVE CHARGE

Chief Executive of Each State Made Head of Registration Therein—Mayors and Selected Boards Given Authority in Cities of More Than 30,000.

Washington.—Instructions concerning the methods of carrying into effect the mandates of the army draft law have been issued by the war department. Responsible officials will be governed by the following orders:

> The president is authorized to call upon all public officers to assist in the execution of the law. The plan is, however, to rely on the people for the proper execution of the law. It is expected that patriotic citizens will offer their services free as registrars. Such services will be greatfully acknowledged. Volunteers for this service should communicate immediately with the proper official.

There was a time in the country's history when military enumerators, becked by bayonets, went out among the people to take a compulsory service census. Today, under the principle of universal liability to service, the execution of the law is put into the hands of the people.

The approval of the new national army bill and the president's proclamation thereunder have been coincident. All persons within the age limits prescribed are required to present themselves for registration at the customary voting places in the voting precincts in which they have their permanent homes, on a day which the president will announce.

The governor of each state is the chief of registration therein. The machinery of registration in each county is in charge of the sheriff, the county clerk, and the county physician, acting ex officio, unless a different board shall be announced by the governor. In cities containing populations of more than 30,000, the registration will be under the control of the mayor and selected boards of registration. In order that the disignated county and city officials, and the people generally, can get a clear understanding of the census methods the following brief outline is given:

The sheriffs, or other designated officials, immediately upon receiving notice from the governor, shall appoint registrars for each voting precinct.

Apportionment of Registrars.

The proportion of registrars shall be one for each 170 persons to be registered. Each age to be registered will comprise about 1 per cent of the population.

If, for instance, all men between nineteen and twenty-five years of age, inclusive, are to be registered, the registrar would have to enroll about 7 per cent of the precinct population.

It is desirable to accept the services of competent volunteer registrars to serve without compensation. All registrars must be sworn.

The voting place in each precinct must be prepared for registration. Full printed instructions covering every detail of registration will be in the hands of sheriffs and mayors on the fifth day after the president's proclamation.

Cities of Over 30,000 Population.

The mayor of a city containing more than 30,000 inhabitants, or the officials designated by the governor therein, shall, with approval of the governor, appoint for each ward or convenient minor subdivision containing about 30,000 people one registration board, and shall designate one officer of each board to perform duties similar to those imposed on the sheriff, as heretofore outlined. If the mayor desires, he may appoint a central board to coordinate the work of minor boards.

Duties of County Clerks, and of Clerks of Cities of Over 30,000 People.

On the fifth day after the president has issued his proclamation, clerks of counties and cities of over 30,000 must secure a supply of blanks and copies of the registration regulations from the sheriff or from the mayor. Absentees and the sick will apply to such clerks to have their registration cards filled out. In no case shall such persons be given registration certificates. They are to be instructed by the clerk that the burden is on them to see to it that the cards reach the registrars of their home precincts by registration day.

Absentees and the Sick.

Persons absent from their home counties may be registered by mail. If so absent, a man should go to the clerk of the county where he may be staying, on the sixth day after the date of the president's proclamation. If he is in a city of over 30,000 population, the city clerk is the official to whom to apply. The absentee will be told how to register, but he must mail his card in time to reach his precinct by registration day.

Persons too sick to present themselves for registration must send a competent person to the county or city clerk on the sixth day after the issuing of the proclamation. The clerk will give instructions for registration.

Colleges, Universities, Homes and Other Institutions.

Officials of educational, charitable and other institutions should apply for instructions to the county or city clerk on the sixth day after the date of the proclamation for instructions as to a convenient method of registration.

The wardens of jails, penitentiaries, and reformatories should apply to the county or city clerk for instructions on the sixth day.

Five days after the date of the president's proclamation complete regulations will be in the hands of all sheriffs and of the officials of cities of over 30,000 population.

BANKS ASKED TO CO-OPERATE

Secretary Authorizes Financial Institutions to Receive Subscriptions for the Bond Offerings.

Washington.—Secretary McAdoo telegraphed the entire list of 27,513 national and state banks and trust companies in the United States, authorizing them to receive subscriptions for the $2,000,000,000 bond offering, enlisting their co-operation, and requesting them to telegraph a rough estimate of the amount of bonds each would take for itself and its patrons.

"You can render an invaluable service to your country," Mr. McAdoo told the banks, "by receiving subscriptions and co-operating with the federal reserve bank in your district."

Loan Subscriptions Pour In.

To all clearing house associations in the country Mr. McAdoo sent a telegram in which he said:

"The amount of the initial loan has been determined by the needs of the government and not arbitrarily. The enthusiastic and patriotic co-operation of the banks and bankers of the country will guarantee the success of the undertaking."

The result of the first announcement of the loan has been a deluge of subscriptions, aggregating many millions. Most of these came in by wire to the treasury. Virtually every large city and every state in the Union was represented.

Lend $100,000,000 to Italy.

Negotiations continued today with representatives of the nations to which the United States is extending credit. Count di Celiere, the Italian ambassador, received the full amount of the first $100,000,000 loan made by this government to Italy.

Subscriptions to the second offering of treasury certificates were received during the day by the federal reserve banks. Indications are that the secretary will call for the proceeds within a week, possibly a few days.

The $100,000,000 loan to France will be turned over to Ambassador Jusserand, in whole or part, within a day or so.

MAY CENTER IN WASHINGTON

Probability That One Committee Will Purchase All Supplies Needed by the Allied Countries.

Washington.—Creation of a central purchasing committee in Washington for all supplies bought in the United States for the allied governments was forecast here by Sir Hardman Lever, financial expert of the British war mission. The committee will supplant J. P. Morgan & Co.

Discussing the world financial situation, the British expert expressed the opinion that Germany will be practically bankrupt in the credit markets after the war.

"Our enemies," he said, "for all their boasted efficiency, have never had the courage to face their financial problems, with the result that when the war is over they will be hard put to it."

The Teutonic governments having pyramided one internal loan upon another, he explained, their interest charges would be so great that he believed they would either have to repudiate a large part of their debt or face inability to buy the enormous quantities of material they would need for reconstruction.

The allies, he added, had paid their way in the war "by the straightforward and natural means, by pouring out their gold, by selling enormous masses of American securities, by raising loans." As a result, he predicted that the end of the war would find the allies in good shape financially, despite their enormous permanent debts.

Chiffon to Replace Georgette.

Chiffon, which, so the wiseacres say, is to triumph over the long reigning crepe, Georgette, is embroidered, lace-trimmed, beaded. Flowered chiffons are made up in the utmost simplicity, but on most graceful lines. Fine cotton voiles in a bewildering array of exquisite designs, striped, dotted, checked, flowered, openwork striped or plaided, bordered, are fashioned into softly-girdled, straight-falling, bewitching frocks.

No Animals for Him.

One day John's mother was going to have company and she told him to go to the market and get some oysters. She said: "We will have oyster soup." John was busy thinking. Finally he said: "I'll eat the soup, but no animals for me."

Fad That May Return.

"In my time," declared grandma, "girls were more modest." "I know," said the flippant girl. "It was a fad once. We may get back to it."—Life.

Brakeman Was Shocked.

Among the things which passed through the mind of a brakeman yesterday was 11,000 volts of electricity, says a New York dispatch. Now the man feels just a bit snappier than usual and is going about his work with no faculty impaired. The brakeman climbed to the roof of a freight car in the Bronx yards of the New Haven railroad in the course of his work to ease the pressure of the car's side door. Above his head the giant feed wire dangled. He started to walk toward the rear of the train and walked into the sagging wire. He does not know that he missed the snappiest acrobatic performance in the history of railroading. When they climbed up on the car they found him yawning and a bit mystified, but when an ambulance surgeon arrived there was nothing for him to do but congratulate the brakeman.

Protects Eardrums From Concussion.

A French ear specialist, Doctor Bardier, has devised a protection for the eardrums of artillerymen against the concussion of explosion when firing their cannon. It consists of a pledget of cotton batting, loosely packed and soaked in carbolized glycerin, this to be inserted in the ear; and an earmuff, loosely filled with cotton batting, this to cover the whole ear and the parts surrounding it. Of course, there is one for each ear.

The loose packing of the cotton makes it interfere only slightly with the wearer's hearing, but prevents all shock to the eardrums.

BROKEN DOWN IN HEALTH

Woman Tells How $5 Worth of Pinkham's Compound Made Her Well.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them."—Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache, or bearing-down pains, need the tonic properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

SULPHUR FROM SMELTER GAS

Methods of Handling Fumes Proposed by University Professor Regarded as Most Important.

In regard to getting the sulphur fumes out of smelter gas, Prof. S. W. Young of the Leland Stanford university lately presented to the American Institute of Chemical Engineers a paper on proposed methods whereby the result of the process is crude sulphur. This would, indeed, be a godsend. When copper and other ores are smelted they must also be roasted to get the sulphur away from the metal. This is easy enough to do, but the fumes that escape into the air are the fumes of sulphurous acid, and if there is anything that disposes a farmer to carry a pitchfork and a double-barreled shotgun along with him when he goes to make his protest it is these very sulphurous fumes in the air. In fact, in some states the laws now forbid the liberation of the gases of burning sulphur in nearly every activity except that of volcanoes. Volcanoes are exempt.

It is possible to collect this sulphurous gas and make sulphuric acid out of it, but some plants are so located that transportation costs forbid. Sulphur, on the other hand, may be stored out of doors so long as desired and sold whenever there is a good price available for it.

Two methods are known, a wet one and a dry one, but both depend upon the tendency of sulphur to get out of combination with oxygen in the presence of certain other bodies. Vast quantities are likely to be thus produced.—Ellwood Hendrick.

Every Picture Tells a Story

Is Your Back Stiff, Lame and Achy?

Do Weak Kidneys Keep You Sick, Tired and All Worn Out?

IF YOU have a constant, dull ache, or sharp pains whenever you bend or twist your back, and the kidney secretions seem disordered, too, don't waste time plastering or rubbing the bad back. It's likely that the cause is kidney weakness, and delay in treating the kidneys may invite uric acid poisoning, gravel, dropsy or fatal Bright's disease.

Get Doan's Kidney Pills, a special remedy for weak kidneys, used around the world and publicly recommended by 50,000 people in the U. S. A.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

GIVES DOAN'S THE CREDIT.

C. Rettinger, W. Seymour St., Kentland, Ind., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for years. Sharp pains shot through my back and gradually became worse until I could hardly get up or down. My kidneys didn't do their work as they should. The kidney secretions were scanty and burned in passage. The secretions were also filled with sediment. Finally, I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and soon my kidneys became stronger. It wasn't long before I was free from all the suffering. I give Doan's Kidney Pills great credit for the wonderful benefit they brought."

TROUBLE NEVER RETURNED.

Mrs. J. Martin, Defiance St., Stryker, Ohio, says: "I suffered from kidney trouble brought on by overwork and a nervous strain. At times I couldn't walk on account of the sharp pains in my back. It was impossible for me to go up a flight of stairs. My feet felt cold and numb and swelled so badly I couldn't wear my shoes. My head ached and my nerves were a wreck. Different doctors brought only slight relief. At last I took Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I have never had any return of kidney trouble."

GAME FISHING

by DIXIE CARROLL

Author of LAKE and STREAM GAME FISHING

FLY TACKLE FOR BEGINNER.

My Dear Buck:

You want to get into the fly-casting game, but you feel that the price of an outfit is high. That all depends, old man, on how you go about it. You have heard so much about rods at $25 to $50 and so on, that it makes you feel sick when you think of practicing on such high priced tackle. You expect to give the tackle some hard knocks before you get the hang of the sport and you see your bankroll with a healthy case of shrinkage during the operation.

For a starter there is no need of going deeper into the mint for an outfit than say $15 to $18 and if you do feel like playing her a little higher, $25 makes a limit, and at that you can get a good serviceable outfit that will take you through the season and give you a working practice that will make you a "stay-for-sure" fly-caster.

Select Rod With Care.

Of course every fellow wants as fine an outfit as he can select after he's in the game and has the rough edges worn off. A rod for instance should have the same consideration that one gives to the selection of a shotgun or rifle. It takes the same place in the fishing kit that the gun does in the hunting layout. A fellow pays a good price for a gun, he selects the best he can get and is mighty particular about the drop—the bore and all details, because he depends on his gun to stand him well at the right moment. Therefore as the rod holds the same value to the fisherman, the care in selection and the money put into the rod covers a big vital point in the outfit.

However, for a starter we can select a well made and serviceable line of tackle at a very moderate cost. Here is an outfit, from which a selection can be made at either end, as to price, and it will cover tackle good enough for any beginner. You can buy the $5 rod or the $10 one or go anywhere between, and you will get good value as far as service goes.

Outfit for the Beginner.

Fly rod of split bamboo or steel, $5 to $10.

Reel, single action, click, $1 to $5.

Enameled waterproof silk line, $1.50.

Half dozen 6 foot gut leaders, $1.25.

Two dozen artificial flies, about eight patterns, $3.

Fly book, $1.50.

Wicker creel or basket, $2.

Landing net (folding), $1.25.

Leader box, 25c.

In selecting your rod, make it a 9 to 9½ foot in length, 5 ounce weight, three piece with extra tip, snake guides, German silver ferrules and solid metal reel seat. The rod when together should turn around in the hand with exactly the same droop all around. It should show an even curve without lopping over to one side and have plenty of action when you whip or bend it.

The line should be enameled waterproof silk, level braided size E. Here you can go a little deeper if you wish and get a double tapered line, which being lighter at the ends makes less friction in going through the guides and enables you to shoot out the line for greater distance in your casts; however a level braided line will answer the purpose.

The reel is not as important in fly-casting as in bait-casting, as it is merely used to store surplus line. The featherweight, 60-yard size, weighing 3 ounces, makes a good all round reel, while the automatics are coming into use to a greater extent each season.

Flies You Swear By.

Whip a stream for a few hours trying every fly in your kit without a rise, when the fish are "off," and then pick a fly at the windup when they happen to be "on" and get a well-filled creel and you will play that fly clean across the board, until the same thing happens over again with another fly. One well-known fisherman who carries in his kit an assortment of about a dozen flies, admits that in the past five years he has seldom used other than three flies and he is some fisherman at that, not the porch variety.

For the eight patterns to go with the above outfit let it go at Coachman, Professor, Queen of Waters, Cow Dung, Brown Hackle, Silver Doctor, McGinty and Emerson Hough Bucktail. This last named fly is a new one to most trout fisherman, but it sure is a killer. It isn't a very fancy looking cuss, just an ordinary sort of a fly that don't shine up alongside of the dainty looking feathery affairs, but to those who have used it, it holds the first place in their fly book, because it is certainly some creel filler.

With the above tackle, Buck, you can have many pleasant days on the trout streams and feel that you are learning a game that has added attractions every time you play it.

DECREASE IN CONSUMPTION.

The per capita consumption of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, was, according to the final government report, 19.40 gallons. This is the smallest figure since 1902.

While the "withdrawal for consumption" of distilled liquors was greater in 1916 than in 1915, it was less than in any year between 1902 and 1915. The slight increase was chiefly due, says the commissioner of internal revenue to "the effective enforcement of the internal revenue tax on distilled spirits." It should be remembered that the "withdrawal for consumption" does not mean that the liquor all went down the throats of American citizens. Much of it is forced out of the government warehouses by the expiration of the bonded period. When liquor is taken out of bond the tax is paid and it is officially recorded as "consumed." As a matter of fact a large part of it is merely transferred to private warehouses to await market demands. The fact that large quantities remain in bond until forced out by the time limit is sufficient proof that actual consumption of spirituous liquors is decreasing.

IN WINE-DRINKING ITALY.

Prof. Leonardo Bianchi, an authority on alcoholism in Italy, agrees with Lambroso and Ferri concerning the degeneration caused by the wine-drinking customs of his country. He says:

"I know from my experience that deep melancholy, persecutional mania, jealousy leading to the assassination of the suspected individual can, in many cases, be directly traced to over-indulgence in the gift of Bacchus. Most of our great criminals were hard drinkers before starting on their career of crime, or are sons of hard drinkers. The headquarters of the Mano Nera and other associations of malefactors is the wineshop. We can easily become master of cholera and diphtheria, of typhoid fever and malaria. The grave problem before us is the prevention of the insidious alcoholization of the nation. The degrading poverty of the lower classes in certain sections of the country, our lazzaroni, the passion for gambling, the terrible infant mortality—for all this, and more yet, the special form of our alcoholism is mainly responsible."

AMERICA HAS TRIED THEM ALL.

We in America know more about legislative methods of dealing with the liquor traffic than all the world besides. We know everything that Europe knows, and some things of which Europe has not legislatively dreamed. It is diverting to those who know the facts, when some dillettante bewails the extent to which unsophisticated America is hurtling blindly along the prohibition trail, following dogmas preached by professional agitators, without stopping to take stock of what older and more practiced nations have learned. These writers are engagingly naive. Everything that Europe has ever tried on this question we have tried, and more.—From Article by Rollin O. Everhart in the Independent.

ALCOHOL NOT NEEDED.

"Ninety-nine per cent of the medical profession feel that there is no medical necessity for the use of alcohol in any form as a curative," says Dr. William A. Evans, formerly Chicago's health commissioner. "So far as its use by women is concerned, alcohol not only does no good, it actually does much harm. Its sole effect is to intoxicate women to the point where they do not care much whether they are suffering or not."

FRANCES E. WILLARD DAY.

The legislatures of six states have enacted laws providing for an annual temperance day in the public schools, most of them calling it "Frances E. Willard day."

MAKING CHURCH FURNITURE.

Seven thousand five hundred and ninety liquor establishments closed their doors within the last year. During the year preceding June 30, 1916, a liquor shop closed every hour, and a church was established every three hours. This explains why one of the big bar fixture companies in this country has quit making bar fixtures, and is now manufacturing church furniture.

NEW YORK DRY IN 1920.

In New York state 600 saloons went out of business on October 1 last. Rev. J. V. Chalmers, rector of Holy Trinity church, New York city, predicted that New York city will be dry by 1920.

A REASON FOR THE SALOON.

A saloon keeper, testifying before the Chicago council commission as to the difficulties in running a "respectable" saloon, told of a talk with an ex-mayor of the city. The ex-mayor, he said, excused the existence of low-class saloons in these words: "A certain number of saloons of that kind should be permitted so that when the police want to find a man they can find him right away."

"This," remarks a prohibition journal, "is just about the most valid reason for licensing saloons."

ANY CORN LIFTS OUT, DOESN'T HURT A BIT!

No foolishness! Lift your corns and calluses off with fingers—it's like magic!

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn, can harmlessly be lifted right out with the fingers if you apply upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

For little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain.

This simple drug dries the moment it is applied and does not even irritate the surrounding skin while applying it or afterwards.

This announcement will interest many of our readers. If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to surely get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

One Nurse to Ten Patients.

One nurse to every 200 soldiers is the requirement in modern conflict, as the war in Europe has demonstrated. The proportion of sick and wounded to the entire army is about 5 per cent. That is, if we throw 1,000,000 soldiers against an enemy, at least 50,000 of them will be in the hospitals continually. In a war hospital the average proportion of patients to nurses is ten to one.—Red Cross Magazine.

Government Issues Warning Against Fly Poisons

Following is an extract from "The Transmission of Disease by Flies," Supplement No. 29 to the Public Health Reports, April, 1916.

"Of other fly poisons mentioned, mention should be made, merely for a purpose of condemnation, of those composed of arsenic. Fatal cases of poisoning of children through the use of such compounds are far too frequent, and owing to the resemblance of arsenical poisoning to summer diarrhea and cholera infantum, it is believed that the cases reported do not, by any means, comprise the total. Arsenical fly-destroying devices must be rated as extremely dangerous, and should never be used, even if other measures are not at hand."

106 fly poisoning cases have been reported by the press within the last three years. As stated above this number is but a fraction of the real number. Protect your children by using the safe, efficient, non-poisonous fly catcher

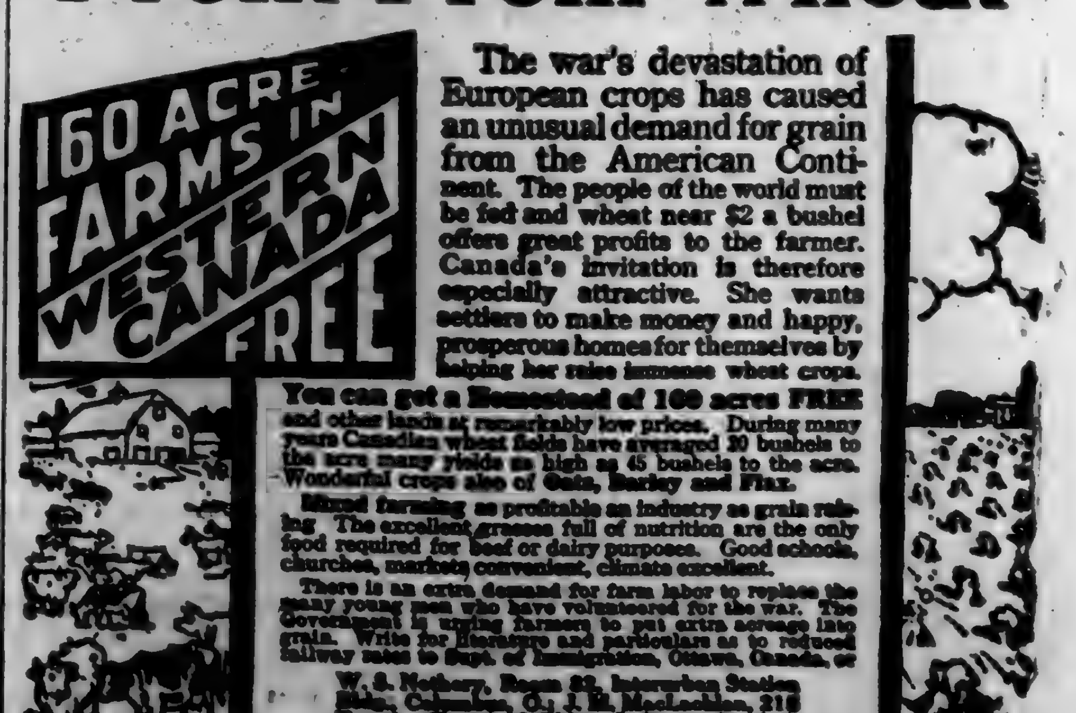
Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat



The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

INCREASING NUMBER OF CHILDREN WEARING GLASSES

Average Child Now has More School Work and Therefore a Greater Strain on the Eyes Says Indiana Medical Society.

It is apparent that more children are wearing glasses than formerly was the case. The question frequently occurs as to the cause. Are children having too heavy demands made on them? Undoubtedly it is a fact that the average child nowadays has more school work than formerly and among all classes the eyes of the child are being used more for near work than was the case a generation ago, according to members of the Indiana Medical society.

Many people believe that a child may be born near-sighted, but this is not the case. Near-sightedness always occurs from strain and in the great majority of cases can be prevented or at least kept down to a low degree.

The current belief is that near-sightedness runs in families. This, while partly true, is really an unfortunate misconception. Among contibuting causes are too short an eyeball, poor general health which makes the tissues weaker and less resistant, and also the disposition of the child, some children preferring to sit and read rather than go out and exercise in the open air. All these questions must receive attention.

Astigmatism is the principal cause. This word is familiar and yet generally misunderstood. Many people suppose that astigmatism means a difference in the two eyes, which is entirely wrong. It is an irregularity of the front part of the eye where the curves should be symmetrical but are not. This irregularity or inequality of curves makes objects appear blurred.

The surest way to stop the increasing dangers of near-sightedness is to correct astigmatism by properly fitting glasses during the growing period to avoid the strain which may develop near-sightedness to the extent of damaging the vision.

WEED IS BIGGEST FOE OF THE INDIANA FARMER

If the state of Indiana were to offer to remit the taxes, during this war crop year, on all farms free of weeds, there certainly would be a wonderful extermination of weeds. That is exactly what is proposed by G. I. Christie, state food director, and the Purdue and other crop experts who are engaged in war crop mobolization. The proposal, however, takes a different form and is summarized in this declaration:

"The weed loss to the farmers, if eliminated, would pay the taxes."

The weed loss in the Indiana corn fields alone runs between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 a year in times of normal corn crop prices. The difference between weeds and no weeds in the corn fields figured at $10,000,000 and it may go higher.

To the soldiers in the trenches the fighting forces of the central powers of Europe are the nation's enemies. To the men in the fields behind these soldiers the most dangerous enemies are weeds. Nationally considered, this foe strikes at a vital point of defense—the food supply and if it is not fought it will defeat both farmer and backyard gardener. It will throttle the country's food supply if it gets a chance. When this national enemy gets an early spring offensive well under way it is hard to stop.

Christie and his crop experts who are directing the Indiana food production campaign, who are helping to procure fertile seed, and who have inspired greater acreage and better cultivation, are now mapping out the warfare against weeds. These men say to the farmers of Indiana that, with the high prices prevailing, the elimination of weeds will bring profits sufficient to cover taxes.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 848 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive gunlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Three Boys Graduate

Three—Howard Winfield Shilling, Wellington L. Miller and Cecil L. Hollopeter—have been added to the world's most valuable assets—young men better fitted to do something and be something in the world because of the years passed in the school room; better fitted to co-ordinate mind and body by reason of the mental discipline there undergone. They are the graduating class for 1917 of the Spencer township high school; and commencement exercises were held at the Lutheran church, Spencerville, last Thursday evening.

The feature of the occasion was an inspiration (incorrectly termed an address), delivered by Dr. Frank E. Jaynes, of the Dennis lyceum bureau. He came with a message, one that none could hear without being bettered.

The speaker soon became on friendly terms with his hearers, particularly the feminine portion thereof, when he complimented the ladies upon their efforts to cultivate their minds and keep informed on current events, in which, he added, they excel their brothers. A round of applause followed; but the men took no part, and every honest one among them inwardly agreed that Dr. Jaynes was right. He said that this was the first time in his experience as a commencement lecturer that he had addressed a graduating class composed wholly of young men, that the young ladies generally predominate; and this led to the compliment to the ladies referred to above.

Dr. Jaynes based his address on Hawthorne's story, "The Great Stone Face." Briefly told, this is as follows:—Once upon a time, a number of people lived in a valley. They had but one means of communication with the outside world, and that was an opening through the mountain to the westward. High up on the side of one of the walls of this opening was what, on close inspection, appeared to be a loose pile of stones only; but, viewed from any point within the valley, it assumed the appearance of a man's face—a striking, forceful face—standing out in bold relief. There was a legend that some time a man would come with a face like the one of stone, and he would bring good fortune to the people. The children were familiar with this tradition, but one boy heard it with different ears than the others. To him, the stone face became an inspiration, and he was ever looking for the coming of the stranger who was to help his people. He grew to manhood and became noted for his intelligence and kindliness, so much so that his fame spread throughout the world; but he never ceased to look for the coming of the promised one. Among his visitors, was another noted scholar. The two were engaged in conversation when evening came and the people were returning from their daily toil. Some of these stopped to listen. Just then, the declining sun lighted up the stone face. The stranger looked upon the countenance of the aged scholar and upon the image on the mountain side and saw what the people had never seen: the two were alike. The people had with him the promised one in the person of their beloved teacher. Years of association in spirit with the stone face had changed his features until they had become the counterpart of those of the object of his lifelong veneration.

The face, the doctor argued, is an index of character; and changes, subject to the aspirations of its possessor. He cited the case of Darwin, who changed so much while away engaged in scientific research covering a period of but a few years that his friends could hardly recognize him when he returned home. Even the measurments of his skull were different.

A right development of the man demands a master passion. That is, a lofty purpose pursued by a determination that yields neither to discouragement nor to obstacles of any nature. The case of Frederick Douglass, the great negro emancipator and orator, was given as an example of a man guided by a master passion. He was born a slave. He never knew his father, never saw his mother after he was 5 yea old and never had a name until he was 24, at which time he escaped from slavery, after seven unsuccessful attempts. He could not read. Notwithstanding these handicaps, he rose to prominence.

Dr. Jaynes closed with the story of a great sculptor, whose ambition was to create a masterpiece that would give him enduring fame. One day, he took compassion on a poor hunchback that was being persecuted by a crowd. While conversing with the object of his pity, he thought that no work of art would endure but for a limited time and fame was but a transient thing. He thought how much nobler it would be to touch the heart of the unfortunate wretch before him and awaken the latter's spirit. He gave the hunchback his greatest piece of sculpture. It became an inspiration to the recipient and a poet was born; and, years after he was dead, the sculptor lived again in the songs of the hunchback he had befriended and inspired.

One sentence found by the doctor inscribed upon the walls of a railroad station is worth remembering: "You are NOT what you think you are; but what you THINK, YOU ARE."

The graduates received their diplomas from the superintendent, Miss Thornburg. She made a brief presentation speech, her subject being "Preparedness"—not preparedness for war, but for life. She spoke of the pleasant relations that had existed between pupils and teacher during their four years in the high school; and the former, if called upon to reply, would undoubtedly have told of how much they owe to Miss Thornburg.

The church was tastefully decorated with the class colors, old gold and green; and over the rostrum hung the motto—"With the ropes of the bells of the past, we ring the bells of the future."

The house was filled by an audience that appreciated the exercises.

The music, which was furnished by the Sheets orchestra, of Auburn, was fine.

Flag Raising

The patriotic citizens of Spencerville and vicinity flung Old Glory to the breeze on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and it now floats from the top of a pole raised at the corner of Main and Pearl streets.

Harry Hilgeman, of Fort Wayne, was the speaker for the occasion; and he delivered a stirring appeal to the patriotism of his hearers. National airs were sung; and to to the "Red, White and Blue," Lucile and Aileen, twin daughters of Raymond Rhodes, run up the flag. A large crowd attended the exercises.

Alumni Banquet

The seventh annual banquet of the Spencerville high school alumni was held at the Lutheran church last Saturday evening. The attendance was fair, notwithstanding the inclement weather.

Rev. A. K. Mumma acted as toast master. The president, Miss Vera Silberg, gave an address of welcome, which was responded to by Howard Shilling. Following were the toasts: "The Seniors," Miss Bertha Thornburg; "The Faculty," Wellington Miller; "The High School," Miss Hazel Strout; "The Visitor," Miss Golden Murray.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

ARE YOU GUILTY?

A FARMER carrying an express package from a big mail-order house was accosted by a local dealer.

"Why didn't you buy that bill of goods from me? I could have saved you the express, and besides you would have been patronizing a home store, which helps pay the taxes and builds up this locality."

The farmer looked at the merchant a moment and then said:

"Why don't you patronize your home paper and advertise? I read it and didn't know that you had the stuff I have here."

U. S.—Teutonic War News

There will be no difficulty in financing the government's requirements for the war with Germany and this can be done without disturbing the country's business, said William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury, at New York.

In announcing that department of labor employment agencies throughout the country had registered 15,000 skilled shipbuilders for work on the great wooden merchant fleet, Secretary Wilson, at Washington, said this achievement was "only a minor step in the nation-wide mobilization of labor" proposed as a war measure.

"Unless the United States marshals all her resources, both military and industrial, and does it immediately, there is a great probability that we shall see German troops in this country within a year," said Judge Lucien F. Burpee at Hartford, Conn.

James W. Gerard of New York, ambassador at Berlin during the historic crisis that led to war with Germany, speaking before the Chicago Bar association said that Germany, officialy, was planning to invade the United States immediately upon a successful conclusion of its war with the allied countries.

Under the initial draft to secure 500,000 men to make up the first army for the war with Germany, New York will furnish the greatest number, 45,845, and Nevada the lowest, 500. This has been determined by the war department at Washington.

It was announced at Washington that the American sailing vessel Margaret was destroyed off the Irish coast on April 27 by a submarine.

Three hundred ambulances and 7,000 doctors and drivers will be sent to France as soon as a transport can be obtained, it was announced by the council of national defense at Washington.

Seventy-one German and Austrian merchant ships seized by the U. S. government will be repaired and ready for commission within five months, the federal shipping board at Washington estimated.

The American steamer Rockingham has been sunk by a German submarine. Thirteen men are missing. Two boats containing 33 men were picked up, one by a patrol vessel. One boat containing 13 men was not found. The American steamship Rockingham, formerly the steamship Nebraskan, was of 4,408 tons gross.

The French commissioners were told at Washington that the American government is willing to send troops to France—one of the urgent recommendations they brought to this country—when the allies believe they can afford to spare the necessary ships for transporting an army and its equipment across the Atlantic. Marshal Joffre held a long conference with President Wilson on the question of sending American troops to France.

"If we don't fight the war on the other side," Secretary Lane said, "we shall have to fight it on this side of the Atlantic." Lane, speaking before the defense counsel of governors and state representatives at Washington, said that the great destruction of ships was threatening the existence of Great Britain and France and menacing the United States.

* * *

The movement to have an American army sent to fight in France at the earliest possible moment took one more step toward accomplishment. It also developed that the civilian officials of the government at Washington are almost in a body in favor of the plan, while military advisers of the war department stand solidly against sending any soliders to France until they have been thoroughly trained here.

Domestic

A call for woman volunteers for work as street car conductors was issued by City Traction Commissioner Sanderson of Cleveland, O.

Sailors from the French warships that escorted the French high commission to the United States were accorded the greatest reception ever given by Americans to sailors of a foreign government at New York.

Continued reports of marked increase in the acreage devoted to food crops and scarcity of farm help, as well as seed, came from all parts of the country to the department of agriculture at Washington in the weekly dispatches on weather and crop conditions.

The University of Kentucky at Lexington, Ky., canceled its entire athletic schedule for 1917 because three-fourths of its athletes have enlisted.

A possible nation-wide strike of bakers, one that certainly would have involved the entire middle West, was balked by Charles F. Clyne, United States district attorney, when he settled the Chicago walkout.

Announcement was made in parliament at Ottawa by Sir Thomas White, the minister of finance, that plans are under way for joint action by Canada and the United States to reduce the price of wheat. He stated that Sir George Foster, the Canadian minister of trade and commerce, now in Washington, is discussing with the American authorities the fixing of maximum prices for wheat on the whole of the North American continent.

Herbert C. Hoover arrived at New York from England and said he would proceed at once to Washington to assume his new position as head of the country's food board. "Submarine destriction has been steadily increasing for six weeks. The situation is one of extreme gravity," declared Mr. Hoover. "The European food situation requires every possible effort we can make," he said.

President R. A. Pearson of the Iowa State Agricultural college at Ames has been granted an immediate leave of absence to accept the position of assistant secretary of agriculture at Washington.

Foreign

President Artiguenave of Hayti has sent a message to congress demanding a declaration of war against Germany.

The powder factory at Furth, Germany exploded, killing 521 persons, and a similar explosion at Troisdoorf killed 30, according to reports received at Basle, Switzerland.

It was announced at Rome that the special mission to America will be composed of Prince Udine, Senator Marconi, Marquis Borsareli, undersecretary for foreign affairs, and Deputies Ciufelli and Nitti, both foreign ministers.

Washington

The French mission was received on the floor of the house at Washington with roars of cheers and cries of "Vive la France" from the floors and galleries. Rene Viviani, head of the mission, delivered a stirring speech in French.

* * *

Absolute authority to regulate in its discretion the production, distribution and prices of food and other necessities during the war was asked of congress by the administration. In a sweeping bill introduced with administration approval in the house at Washington it is proposed to empower the president, under the war clause of the Constitution, to take drastic measures whenever in his opinion the national emergency shall require.

The food situation precipitated another lively discussion in the senate at Washington, during which Senator Thomas reiterated his opinion that high food prices could be cured by a liberal hanging of food speculators on handy lamp posts, and Senator Williams suggested that the "German corruption fund" might have figured in creating a food scare that resulted in soaring prices.

All recruiting records of the United States army, navy and marine corps were broken during April when 68,524 men enlisted, the war and navy departments announced at Washington. Of this total 40,258 joined the army, 21,650 the navy and 4,607 the marine corps.

* * *

General Joffre, the grayhaired marshal of France, with just eight words spoken in a soft voice literally took the United States senate at Washinton by storm. These were the words: "I do not speak English. Vive l'Amerique." Cheer after cheer greeted him and ceased only when the hero of the Marne had left the senate chamber.

H. E. Barnard, State Food and Drug Commissioner, Issues Important Bulletin.

TO WARD OFF FOOD CRISIS

Asks Them to Encourage Use of Staple Groceries and to Carry Light Stock of Fancy Groceries—Fourth Regiment Being Organized.

Indianapolis.—In a bulletin sent out to grocers in Indiana, H. E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner, gives suggestions relative to the conservation and mobilization of the food supply, from the grocers' standpoint.

A direct attack on the eating of high-priced candies and arguments that plain sugar should be substituted for this food, are made in the bulletin, which follows:

"To the grocers of Indiana: The splendid response to the call for unusual efforts by farmers in the planting of larger acreages, and the cultivation of home gardens, will, if the growing season is favorable, give us good crops of some staples. But the surplus is so low and demand so great that even an increased crop will not prevent scarce and high-priced food another year unless we conserve our present supply and prevent wastage of the coming crop.

Suggestions to Grocers.

"The grocer, who distributes most of the food supply, can help greatly in warding off a food crisis. To this end I make these suggestions:

"1. Encourage the use of staple groceries, especially the cereals, such as rolled oats, rice, cornmeal, hominy grits; macaroni; the legumes, such as dried peas and beans; dried fruits, such as prunes and raisins; the sugars, including molasses and glucose.

"These foods are both cheap and nutritious. They must be used in large quantities and instead of more costly and less nutritious foods.

"2. Stock and urge the sale of cooking oils and fats, instead of high-priced butter. Corn oil, cotton seed oil, lard compounds, uncolored oleomargarine, beef suet, all are very high in food values, wholesome and good.

"3. Stock lightly with fancy groceries, such as condiments, preserves, dessert preparations, tinned biscuits, olive oils and prepared foods that can't be bought in bulk and cooked at home.

Nourishment and Cost.

"These foods furnish the least nourishment for their cost. Their use should be discouraged until the present crisis in the food supply is past.

"4. Stock lightly with imported products. Do not buy or sell sardines from Norway when domestic sardines are available at much lower prices; cease selling expensive imported cheese, olive oil and fancy fruits.

"5. Stop pushing the sale of high-priced candies. There is more food in a pound of sugar than in a dollar box of candy. Confectionery is a luxury that both thrift and patriotism will deny us.

"6. During the present food shortage discourage overbuying of staples that will keep in the grocery as well as in the home. This is no time to speculate in foodstuffs.

"The grocer easily may change the buying habits of his customers and help them to choose wisely that they may feed their families better and more cheaply.

"Such a service will be most valuable, for it will give us increased efficiency and our allies a larger share of our food supply.

"I urge your patriotic co-operation in this crisis in the food situation. Yours very truly, H. E. Barnard, State Food and Drug Commissioner."

Forming New Regiments.

Harry B. Smith, adjutant general of the Indiana National Guard, has plans well under way for the formation of a fourth regiment of infantry in the state.

Capt. John J. Toffey of the United States army, inspector-instructor of the Indiana guard, is to be commissioned colonel of the new regiment as soon as it is organized, General Smith said. It will be necessary to obtain from the war department a release of Captain Toffey from his present duties. A lieutenant colonel for the regiment probably will be selected by Captain Toffey.

A fifth regiment also is in prospect for the near future. General Smith will use companies from various Indiana towns and cities that already have been organized to compose the two new regiments. It is intended eventually to have a sixth regiment, thus making two full brigades of infantry for the state.

Made Red Cross Secretary.

With the election of A. F. Bentley of Paoli as secretary of the Indianapolis Red Cross, the work of that organization has taken on an added impetus. Mr. Bentley is thoroughly experienced in Red Cross work, having been assigned to Indiana as a field worker by the national organization. One of Mr. Bentley's important duties will be to receive and act on requests from other towns and cities throughout the state for the organization and direction of other chapters of the American Red Cross society.

Wants Farmers to Organize.

Preceding preliminary organization of farmers for participation in a campaign for the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, Governor Goodrich, addressing the farmers, expressed his views as to a few reforms that he believed should be embodied in the proposed new basic law. The governor told the farmers he believed particularly in the efficiency of the short ballot, and that every law enforcing officer of the state should be appointed by the governor.

The meeting was called by L. H. Wright, master of the State Grange, and others. The plan of organization consists of the formation of a farmers' state central committee, to be composed of two members each from the State Farmers' congress, the Indiana State Grange and the Indiana Federation of Agriculture association, which committee will "direct a campaign of education through the three state associations."

Favors Farm Representation.

Governor Goodrich told the farmers he believed they should have representation in the convention, particularly from the large agricultural counties, and urged them to form an organization to protect their interests.

The governor urged adoption of the budget system by the constitutional convention as a means of centering responsibility for financial expenditures on the executive department rather than diffusing that responsibility among 150 members of the legislature.

Several speakers at the morning session referred to the proposed convention, and it was noticeable that the meeting was dominated by a conservative element. Those present were agreed that prohibition and woman suffrage should be submitted separately.

Resolutions indorsing the formation of a close organization through which speakers may be sent to all parts of the state to address farmers' organizations on the constitutional convention, and its importance to the farmers' interests, Mr. Wright presided at the meeting and Mr. Coleman acted as secretary.

Red Cross Relief in Homes.

Mrs. J. A. Sutcliffe of Indianapolis is the first woman to propose 'Red Cross garden work to Uncle Sam. Thus far Mrs. Sutcliffe has received high commendation from the American Red Cross at Washington, which requested that if her plan can be worked out successfully through Indianapolis Red Cross headquarters, she pass it on to Washington for the general good of the country.

Mrs. Sutcliffe's plan, in brief, calls for Red Cross garden work in the country districts and Red Cross hospital shelves or cupboards in the homes in cities and towns for the benefit of soldiers' families and hospital bases. It is only her plan as yet, for she has not received the official sanction of the Indianapolis Red Cross headquarters.

Message to Indiana Women.

"This is the message to the country women in Indiana," said Mrs. Sutcliffe: "Form Red Cross garden units! Let each member plant an extra row of corn, beans, onions, tomatoes, potatoes, beets, etc., conserving all wastage of gardens and fruits by drying and canning, making jelly, bottling grape juice, etc. Let each family provide a space in the home cupboard labeled 'Red Cross Benefit.' Each article should be labeled, as 'Grape Jelly,' 'Beans' and so on, before placing it in the cupboard or on the shelf. The president of each Red Cross garden unit should take an invoice of each member's ingathering in the fall and report to adjacent headquarters, or wherever ordered."

Captain Coppock in Full Charge.

Capt. Edward Coppock, U. S. A., has been placed in full charge of the examination of applicants for the officers' reserve training camp at Fort Benj. Harrison, which opens May 14. Hereafter applicants will not necessarily pass through the central war department at Chicago. Although hundreds of applications have been made, it was announced that there is urgent need for more applicants to fill out the quota of 2,500 for Indiana.

McCardle Is New Chairman.

John McCardle, business man and general merchant of Indianapolis, becomes chairman of the public service commission upon its reorganization. Three new members, appointed by Governor Goodrich will take their places on the commission at that time. They are: McCardle, William J. Wood, now investigator for the interstate commerce commission, and Ernest I. Lewis, political and special writer for the Indianapolis News.

Outlines Food Chest Plan.

C. A. Carlisle, treasurer of the Studebaker corporation of South Bend, outlined to Governor Goodrich a plan to create a "food chest" for the state and nation. Mr. Carlisle said he believed he could find 100 St. Joseph county farmers who would agree to give the crops from ten acres of land for the "food chest."

Calls Educators to Meet.

Governor Goodrich issued a call for a conference of university, college and normal school presidents, county and city superintendents and the heads of private and parochial schools to be held in the house of representatives chamber, for the purpose of "planning ways and means for the mobilization of the educational forces of the state, which will provide for all an opportunity of enlisting in this paramount service to our state and nation." How best the pupils can serve their country will be considered at this conference.

PLAN CURB ON KAISER'S RULE

REICHSTAG COMMITTEE WOULD REVISE IMPERIAL CONSTITUTION REGARDING ISSUING DECREES.

EDICTS MUST BE APPROVED

Also Proposes to Hold the Chancellor Responsible for the Violation of Duty—Masses Clamor for Peace Terms.

Amsterdam, May 7.—A restriction of the power of the emperor of Germany has been decided upon by the constitution committee of the reichstag, according to a dispatch from Berlin. The committee has decided to alter article 17 of the imperial constitution as follows:

Ordinances and decrees of the kaiser will be issued in the name of the empire and will require for validity the counter signature of the imperial chancellor or his representative, who thereby assumes responsibility to the reichstag."

The decision of the committee was in accordance with a joint proposal by the centrists, national liberals and the progressives. Four conservative members voted against the change.

Bill Holds Chancellor Liable.

The committee also adopted a resolution by the same proposers demanding a bill fixing the chancellor's responsibility for any violation of his official duty and the verification of such violation by a senate tribunal. Dr. Karl Helfferich, secretary of the interior, told the committee that a definite statement in regard to his attitude could not be expected from him. He said that it would only be possible after the federal council had defined its position.

A Berlin dispatch says that General Groener, minister of munitions, defended before the reichstag his May day manifesto to the workers. His defense was in answer to criticism by the social democrats.

Deputy Schoepfin, a social democrat, supported the minister and declared that the manifesto was necessary because "the German people were at a fatal parting of the ways, of which one led to defeat." The deputy said that no one must interfere between, the army at home and in the field and that until the end of the war the working classes must remain absolutely calm.

Four German pacifist organizations have petitioned the reichstag to accept the following principles, in view of the new situation created by the Russian revolution:

1. Germany to make peace with Russia without territorial acquisition, but under a guaranty that the national rights of Germans in Russia be respected.
2. Germany's peace terms in respect to her other enemies to be disclosed.
3. The promotion of general peace by a union of the nations and the reduction of armaments.
4. Internal reorganization based on the will and needs of the German people.

Split on Peace Terms.

Copenhagen, May 7.—The silence of German Imperial Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg concerning Germany's peace terms, if, as declared, it is based on a desire to avoid disrupting the unity of feeling in the country by discussion of contentious questions and not, as some uncharitable German critics assert, upon the absence of a definite government peace policy, has failed of its object.

An acrimonious controversy is now raging in Germany between the big annexationists, the little annexationists and the advocates of no annexations and indemnities whatever.

The Pan-American league has sent circulars to its branches throughout the country asking them to organize meetings everywhere in the interests of "German peace" and against the socialist peace program. The conservatives have introduced an interpellation in the reichstag in an endeavor to smoke out Von Bethmann-Hollweg and force him to declare himself for or against the Scheidemann program. The radicals have introduced a similar interpellation in the Prussian diet.

U. S. MAY LIFT ARMS EMBARGO

Carranza Officers at Juarez Hope to Be Able to Pursue Bandits in Few Days.

El Paso, Tex., May 7.—The report was current in Juarez that the American embargo on arms and ammunition to Mexico will be lifted in a few days, with the result that the pursuit of rebels can be carried on without delays due to shortage of war materials as at present.

TO FIX UP DAMAGED SHIPS

Prinz Oskar, Interned German Steamer, Towed to Cramp Yard for Repair.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 7.—The German steamer Prinz Oskar, seized by the government when the state of war was declared, was towed to the Cramp shipyard for repairs to her machinery, which was damaged by her crew. The Cramp company will also repair the damaged machinery of the German steamer Rhaetia.

KAZAN

By James Oliver Curwood

Copyright by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

JOAN LEARNS THAT THE LOVE OF KAZAN IS A VERY GREAT PRIZE INDEED, AND SHE SHOWS HER AFFECTION FOR THE DOG

Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves the life of Thorpe, his master, and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Even Thorpe is afraid to touch Kazan, but Isobel, the dog's new mistress, wins his affection at once. On the war northward McCready, a dog-team driver, beats the master insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan kills McCready, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader, takes a young mate, Gray Wolf, and a few nights later drives off the pack which had attacked Pierre, a sick man, his daughter Joan, and her baby. Kazan, lured by Joan's kindness, stays near her. Pierre dies. Joan and Kazan start to pull the sledge to the settlement. Joan falls exhausted and cold.

Kazan stopped in the trail. He came back then and sat down upon his haunches beside her, waiting for her to move and speak. But she was very still. He thrust his nose into her loose hair. A whine rose in his throat, and suddenly he raised his head and sniffed in the face of the wind. Something came to him with that wind. He muzzled Joan again, but she did not stir. Then he went forward, and stood in his traces, ready for the pull, and looked back at her. Still she did not move or speak, and Kazan's whine gave place to a sharp, excited bark.

The strange thing in the wind came to him stronger for a moment. He began to pull. The sledge runners had frozen to the snow, and it took every ounce of his strength to free them. Twice during the next five minutes he stopped and sniffed the air. The third time that he halted, in a drift of snow, he returned to Joan's side again, and whined to awaken her. Then he tugged again at the end of his traces, and foot by foot he dragged the sledge through the drift. Beyond the drift there was a stretch of clear ice, and here Kazan rested. During a lull in the wind the scent came to him stronger than before.

At the end of the clear ice was a narrow break in the shore, where a creek ran into the main stream. If Joan had been conscious she would have urged him straight ahead. But Kazan turned into the break, and for ten minutes he struggled through the snow without a rest, whining more and more frequently, until at last the whine broke into a joyous bark. Ahead of him, close to the creek, was a small cabin. Smoke was rising out of the chimney. It was the scent of smoke that had come to him in the wind. A hard, level slope reached to the cabin door, and with the last strength that was in him, Kazan dragged his burden up that. Then he settled himself back beside Joan, lifted his shaggy head to the dark sky and howled.

A moment later the door opened. A man came out. Kazan's reddened, snow-shot eyes followed him watchfully as he ran to the sledge. He heard his startled exclamation as he bent over Joan. In another lull of the wind there came from out of the mass of furs on the sledge the wailing, half-smothered voice of baby Joan.

A deep sigh of relief heaved up from Kazan's chest. He was exhausted. His strength was gone. His feet were torn and bleeding. But the voice of baby Joan filled him with a strange happiness, and he lay down in his traces, while the man carried Joan and the baby into the life and warmth of the cabin.

A few minutes later the man reappeared. He was not old, like Pierre Radisson. He came close to Kazan, and looked down at him.

"My God," he said. "And you did that—alone!"

He bent down fearlessly, unfastened him from the traces, and led him toward the cabin door. Kazan hesitated but once—almost on the threshold. He turned his head, swift and alert. From out of the moaning and wailing of the storm it seemed to him that for a moment he had heard the voice of Gray Wolf.

Then the cabin door closed behind him.

Back in a shadowy corner of the cabin he lay, while the man prepared something over a hot stove for Joan. It was a long time before Joan rose from the cot on which the man had placed her. After that Kazan heard her sobbing; and then the man made her eat, and for a time they talked. Then the stranger hung up a big blanket in front of the bunk, and sat down close to the stove. Quietly Kazan slipped along the wall, and crept under the bunk. For a long time he could hear the sobbing breath of the girl. Then all was still.

The next morning he slipped out through the door when the man opened it, and sped swiftly into the forest. Half a mile away he found the trail of Gray Wolf, and called to her. From the frozen river came her reply, and he went to her.

Vainly Gray Wolf tried to lure him back into their old haunts—away from the cabin and the scent of man. Late that morning the man harnessed his dogs, and from the fringe of the forest Kazan saw him tuck Joan and the baby among the furs on the sledge, as old Pierre had done. All that day he followed in the trail of the team, with Gray Wolf slinking behind him. They traveled until dark; and then, under the stars and the moon that had followed the storm, the man still urged on his team. It was deep in the night when they came to another cabin, and the man beat upon the door. A light, the opening of the door, the joyous welcome of a man's voice, Joan's sobbing cry—Kazan heard these from the shadows in which he was hidden, and then slipped back to Gray Wolf.

In the days and weeks that followed Joan's homecoming the lure of the cabin and of the woman's hand held Kazan. As he had tolerated Pierre, so now he tolerated the younger man who lived with Joan and the baby. He knew that the man was very dear to Joan, and that the baby was very dear to him, as it was to the girl. It was not until the third day that Joan succeeded in coaxing him into the cabin—and that was the day on which the man returned with the dead and frozen body of Pierre. It was Joan's husband who first found the name on the collar he wore, and they began calling him Kazan.

Half a mile away, at the summit of a huge mass of rock which the Indians called the Sun rock, he and Gray Wolf had found a home; and from here they went down to their hunts on the plain, and often the girl's voice reached up to them, calling, "Kazan! Kazan! Kazan!"

Through all the long winter Kazan hovered thus between the lure of Joan and the cabin—and Gray Wolf.

Then came spring—and the Great Change.

CHAPTER X.

The Great Change.

The rocks, the ridges and the valleys were taking on a warmer glow. The poplar buds were ready to burst. The scent of balsam and of spruce grew heavier in the air each day, and all through the wilderness, in plain and forest, there was the rippling murmur of the spring floods finding their way to Hudson's bay. In that great bay there was the rumble and crash of the ice fields thundering down in the early break-up through the Roes Welcome—the doorway to the Arctic, and for that reason there still came with the April wind an occasional sharp breath of winter.

Kazan had sheltered himself against that wind. Not a breath of air stirred in the sunny spot the wolf-dog had chosen for himself. He was more comfortable than he had been at any time during the six months of terrible winter—and as he slept he dreamed.

Gray Wolf, his wild mate, lay near him, flat on her belly, her forepaws reaching out, her eyes and nostrils as keen and alert as the smell of man could make them. For there was that smell of man, as well as of balsam and spruce, in the warm spring air. She gazed anxiously and sometimes steadily, at Kazan as he slept. Her own gray spine stiffened when she saw the tawny hair along Kazan's back bristle at some dream vision. She whined softly as his upper lip snarled back, showing his long, white fangs. But, for the most part, Kazan lay quiet, save for the muscular twitchings of legs, shoulders and muzzle, which always tell when a dog is dreaming; and as he dreamed there came to the door of the cabin out on the plain a blue-eyed girl-woman, with a big brown braid over her shoulder, who called through the cup of her hands, "Kazan, Kazan, Kazan!"

The voice reached faintly to the top of the Sun rock, and Gray Wolf flattened her ears. Kazan stirred, and in another instant he was awake and on his feet. He leaped to an outcropping ledge, sniffing the air and looking far out over the plain that lay below them.

Over the plain the woman's voice came to them again, and Kazan ran to the edge of the rock and whined. Gray Wolf stepped softly to his side and laid her muzzle on his shoulder. She had grown to know what the Voice meant. Day and night she feared it, more than she feared the scent or sound of man.

Since she had given up the pack and her old life for Kazan, the Voice had become Gray Wolf's greatest enemy, and she hated it. It took Kazan from her. And wherever it went, Kazan followed.

Night after night it robbed her of her mate, and left her to wander alone under the stars and the moon, keeping faithfully to her loneliness, and never once responding with her own tongue to the hunt-calls of her wild brothers and sisters in the forests and out on the plains. Usually she would snarl at the Voice, and sometimes nip Kazan lightly to show her displeasure. But today, as the Voice came a third time, she slunk back into the darkness of a fissure between two rocks, and Kazan saw only the fiery glow of her eyes.

Kazan ran nervously to the trail their feet had worn up to the top of the Sun rock, and stood undecided. All day, and yesterday, he had been uneasy and disturbed. Whatever it was that stirred him seemed to be in the air, for he could not see it or hear it or scent it. But he could feel it. He went to the fissure and sniffed at Gray Wolf. Usually she whined coaxingly. But her response today was to draw back her lips until he could see her white fangs.

A fourth time the Voice came to them faintly, and she snapped fiercely at some unseen thing in the darkness between the two rocks. Kazan went again to the trail, still hesitating. Then he began to go down. It was a narrow, winding trail, worn only by the pads and claws of animals, for the Sun rock was a huge crag that rose almost sheer up for a hundred feet above the tops of the spruce and balsam, its bald crest catching the first gleams of the sun in the morning and the last glow of it in the evening. Gray Wolf had first led Kazan to the security of the retreat at the top of the rock.

When he reached the bottom he no longer hesitated, but darted swiftly in the direction of the cabin. Because of that instinct of the wild that was still in him, he always approached the cabin with caution. He never gave warning, and for a moment Joan was startled when she looked up from her baby and saw Kazan's shaggy head and shoulders in the open door. The baby struggled and kicked in her delight, and held out her two hands with cooing cries to Kazan. Joan, too, held out a hand.

"Kazan!" she cried softly. "Come in, Kazan!"

Slowly the wild red light in Kazan's eyes softened. He put a forefoot on the sill, and stood there, while the girl urged him again. Suddenly his legs seemed to sink a little under him, his tail drooped and he slunk in with that doggish air of having committed a crime. The creatures he loved were in the cabin, but the cabin itself he hated. He hated all cabins, for they all breathed of the club and the whip bondage. Like all the sledge-dogs, he preferred the open snow for a bed, and the spruce-tops for shelter.

Joan dropped her hand to his head, and at its touch there thrilled through him that strange joy that was his reward for leaving Gray Wolf and the wild. Slowly he raised his head until his black muzzle rested on her lap, and he closed his eyes while that wonderful little creature that mystified him so—the baby—prodded him with her tiny feet, and pulled his tawny hair. He loved these baby-maulings even more than the touch of Joan's hand.

Motionless, sphinxlike, undemonstrative in every muscle of his body, Kazan stood, scarcely breathing. More than once this lack of demonstration had urged Joan's husband to warn her. But the wolf that was in Kazan, his wild aloofness, even his mating with Gray Wolf had made her love him more. She understood, and had faith in him.

In the days of the last snow Kazan had proved himself. A neighboring trapper had run over with his team, and the baby Joan had toddled up to one of the big huskies. There was a fierce snap of jaws, a scream of horror from Joan, a shout from the men as they leaped toward the pack. But Kazan was ahead of them all. In a gray streak that traveled with the speed of a bullet he was at the big husky's throat. When they pulled him off, the husky was dead. Joan thought of that now, as the baby kicked and tousled Kazan's head.

Another important event bobs up for Kazan, and the wolf dog assumes a new pride and dignity. It's all told in the next installment.

He Disliked Laziness.

After a day or two in a hustling, bustling western town a tramp shook the dust from his boots with a snarl.

"They must be durn lazy people in this town. Everywhere you turn they offer you work to do."

Safe to Be Around.

"How is your husband getting on with his golf?"

"Very well, indeed. The children are allowed to watch him now."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 13

JESUS THE TRUE VINE.

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the vine, ye are the branches.—John 15:5.

This lesson chronologically follows that of last Sunday. Christ had risen with his disciples from the supper table (14:31), and the remainder of his discourse may have occurred in an upper room, or in the courtyard of the house before they left the city, or on the way to the garden of Gethsemane.

I. THE ABIDING LIFE (vv. 1.4). Under the figure of the vine Jesus teaches spiritual truth by natural analogy. The vine is composed of roots, stem, branches, tendrils, and fruit. There is no separate life: the branches are one with the vine. Christ is the head of that body which is the church to its least member. The life lived by the Christian is Christ's life humanized, the purpose of which is fruit bearing. Discipline is in order to fruitfulness. "He (My Father, the vine-dresser) cuts away any branch on me which is not bearing fruit, and cleans every branch which does bear fruit, to make it bear richer fruit" (Moffat's translation). Paul tells us that "no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." The Word is the cleansing agent (17:17). Verse four suggests a double abiding—we in him, and he in us—the branch depending upon the vine for life, and the vine depending upon the branch for fruit. Jesus had just been talking about his approaching death, and his disciples were full of anxiety. He tells them not to be troubled, and by this figure assures them, that, though he would leave them, he would still be joined to them. Although they had been made clean, they are taught that the only way to keep clean is by "abiding," which is to be continued through the eternal spirit after his decease and ascent to the Father. "It is given to us to hold fellowship with both the root that twines itself about the cross and the tendrils which stretch upward to glory."—A. J. Gordon. So long as we think of ourselves, and not of Christ, as the source of power, we shall miss the secret of fruitfulness.

II. The Fruitful Life (vv. 5-8). If we abide in him we will bring forth much fruit. Note the progression: "fruit," "more fruit," "much fruit." If the branch does not bear fruit it is fit only for fuel (Isa. 27:11). "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (v. 7). Our first fruit is to glorify God (v. 8). The vine does not consume the fruit which it produces, though it does exist for its production, thus glorifying God through its fruit-bearing function. The Bible uses many figures to illustrate the intimate relationship between root and fruit. "Without me," emphasizes Christ, "ye can do nothing." The "word" of verse three is equivalent to the word "I" of verse four. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (v. 3). Our fruit bearing is for God's glory because it is an expression of his grace and power, and it is made possible through our identification with his dear son. Our fruitfulness attests our Christian character. We have not yet attained perfection in our conduct, but we are making progress. Progressive deliverance from the power of sin is counterbalanced by corresponding fruitfulness.

III. The Permanent Life (vv. 9-13). "Fruit," "more fruit," "much fruit." Even as the life of Christ has increasingly manifested itself through the ages, so our individual lives are to increase in the fruitfulness which assimilates them to his character and expresses his graces. As the Father has loved him, so has he loved us, and this love he communicates to those who abide in him. The evidence of our abiding is manifested by our joy in keeping his commandments, just as he delighted in keeping his father's commandments. Obedience and joy are correlated terms. The fuller the obedience the greater the joy. Bushnell said: "Heaven is nothing but the joy of a perfectly harmonized being filled with God and his love." Instead of minute, detailed instructions regarding their conduct, the disciples are here presented with love, the governing principle. Love was to be the one sufficient impulse for both divine and human relationships. Our Lord would have the world know his servants by the fruit they bear, which is to be a sufficient badge to identify them in the midst of its wickedness and perversity. The great fact of his love toward us is to be the source and measure of our love toward others. Only love can fulfil the royal law—"thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself (James 2:8). "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments," said Jesus (14:15 R. V.). The evidence that we have this love is in having a heart for his commandments. "I delight to do thy will, O my God," (Psa. 40:8) is the language of a love-filled heart. "Greater love hath no man than this . . ." said Christ facing the tragedy of the cross. He wanted his disciples to understand something of the measure of that love which was willing to give itself to the death for the life of a rebel world. Presently he laid down his life for his foes (Rom. 5:6-10). But to his disciples he gave the pledge of his continued friendship in his resurrection life to comfort them in the trials which he foresaw would test them. He called them "friends," even as he had called Lazarus "our friend" (11-11). He never calls them slaves because a slave "knows not what his Lord doeth."

Three things are mentioned as resulting from the abiding life; power to bear much fruit; transform lives and change circumstances through answered prayer; and fullness of joy—a "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The world with its poor counterfeits has nothing like it to give, but all of these gifts are contingent upon our "abiding" in Christ, the source of every blessing. The personal pronoun suggests peculiarly intimate relationships: "My Father," (vv. 1, 8, 10); "My love," (v. 9); "My disciples," (v. 8); "My commandments," (v. 10); "My joy," (v. 11).

From Carpenter to Professor.

Twenty-five years ago a young Minnesota farmer by the name of Goode, who did odd jobs of carpentering to piece out his income, shingled the house of Harry P. Judson, professor of history in the University of Minnesota. The professor took a fancy to the carpenter and persuaded him to go to college, where he worked his way through with hammer and saw. Professor Judson is now the president of Chicago university, and the carpenter is Dr. J. Paul Goode, professor of geography in the same university. Most of those who succeed in the various kinds of business and in the learned professions are those who began at the bottom and worked their way up. The promotion of the young carpenter is one of the many successes achieved in the secular and spiritual realms. There is this reference to a carpenter who became the greatest teacher of the world: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." (John 3:2).—Christian Herald.

Silas, the Chore Boy

"Silas, the Chore Boy," the Senior class play, was given at Widney opera house last Wednesday evening. It was good, too. Yes, THE NEWS will go even further and say that it was splendid; and every person who attended will back up the assertion. The fact that all of them are amateurs should be taken into consideration when judging their efforts; and, also, they had the sympathy and best wishes of all. These are factors in their favor; but, without these, the play was of a quality that would please any audience.

The honors were evenly divided among the three young ladies in the cast. Alta Hull took the part of "Nancy Ridley," an old maid: but she announced her intention of changing her condition by "hitchin' up" with "Jed Perkins" (Virgil Perry), the town constable. Lela Wallace enacted the role of the heroine; the wronged young wife of "Gerald Blake," the villain. DeVeta Bayman was a charming young school girl, "Pert Ridley"—pert by nature as well as by name.

"Hiram Ridley," the father of "Pert" and the brother of "Nancy," was the part assigned to Stanley [illegible]. He was an honest farmer, who cared for the persecuted wife. His son, "Arthur" (Clayton Hathaway,) nearly lost his life defending the young lady; and, quite naturally, the two became lovers. Virgil Perry, the constable, won the approbation of Miss "Nancy" and also her hand by distinguishing himself when he arrested a non-resisting murderer. "Jed" had hard work to screw up his courage to the proposing point. Harvey Hull had one of the most difficult parts in the entire cast, "Gerald Blake," the "vilyun," who pursued his wife to the Ridly home for the purpose of robbing her of a fortune. He did it well. He came to a merited death at the hand of his colored servant, "Cinch." The two had planned the murder of "Arthur Ridley," but the darkey shot his master by mistake, thereby paving the way for the marriage of "Jed" and "Nancy." Willie Quance played the negro part in true Jack Haverly style.

The title role fell to Herbert Cu[illegible]. "Silas" was the Ridley chore boy; and one member of that family, "Nancy," made life a torment for him. His literary taste ran to blood curdling western stories; and every time he reached an unusually thrilling point, his interest was changed to disgust by the shrill cry, "Silas." His ambition was to be a cowboy, where he would have nothing to do but "shoot injuns fer fun an' ride a hoss." He was always on hand when needed, particularly when the villain waylaid his wife and attempted to rob her of valuable papers. The chore boy held up the ruffian at the point of a revolver in regulation Jesse James style.

Between acts, two charming little misses—Katharine Shull and Marjorie Curie—entertained the audience with recitations.

An audience that filled the opera house enjoyed the play; and there was but one drawback—a long, tedious wait before the curtain went up; but the waiters afterward cheered up, for the best (not the worst) was coming.

Fly Catechism

1. Where is the Fly born? In manure and filth.
2. Where does the Fly live? In all kinds of filth and he carries filth on his feet and wings.
3. Where does the Fly go when he leaves the manure pile, the privy vault and the spittoon? He goes into the kitchen, the dining room and the store.
4. What does the Fly do there? He walks on the bread, fruit and vegetables; he wipes his feet on the butter and he bathes in the milk.
5. Does the Fly visit patients sick with consumption, typhoid fever and cholera infantum? He does and he may call on you next carrying the infection of these diseases.
6. What diseases does the Fly carry? Typhoid fever, consumption, diarrheal diseases, diphtheria, scarlet fever and in fact any communicable disease.
7. How can the Fly be prevented? By destroying all the filth about your premises; screen the privy vault; cover the manure bin; burn all waste matter; destroy your garbage; screen your house.

Either Man Must Kill the Fly or the Fly Will Kill Man.

PREVENT the FLY.

Little Miss Janice, eldest daughter of Derwood Ridgway and wife, last Wednesday fell from the top of the stairs at the Hicksville depot to the street below, causing severe bruises about the head; she was taken to the home of Clarence Dorsey, and a doctor called. She was brought home the same day, and is getting along nicely.

Comments are now being passed on the general neat appearance of St. Joe. It ought to make you feel good when you look around and notice the absence of the tin cans and rubbish. We want to thank those citizens who have become imbued with the clean-up spirit and helped to make St. Joe a neater, cleaner, more healthful little city.

Men who marry to dodge military service will not escape, under a ruling of the war department recently. "All men married since the outbreak of the war will be treated upon the same basis as unmarried men insofar as their military obligations are concerned." The department announced officially, and asked at the same time that the press give prominence to the ruling.

Consumption costs the people of Indiana not less than $7,000,000 annually. Typhoid fever costs not less than $2,000,000; Diphtheria, Scarlet fever and diarrheal diseases costs not less than $2,000,000; and illness like colds, headaches, rheumatism, etc., through the lowering of vitality and efficiency cost enormously. These are careful estimates and be accepted by the most conservative.

LET NOTHING SPOIL—SHOW THRIFT IN YOUR HOME

United States Department of Agriculture Urges That Housewives Make Saving Rather Than Spending a Social Standard.

Heat, dirt, improper handling, flies, insects, and rats or mice are the greatest food wasters, says the United States department of agriculture.

Keep perishables cool, clean, and covered.

The moment meat, fish, milk, and eggs are allowed to get warm they begin to spoil.

Bacteria and germs multiply rapidly in slightly warm food, and quickly make it dangerous or unfit to eat.

Keep perishable foods in the coolest, cleanest place you can provide, preferably in a good refrigerator or ice house, but, at any rate, in covered vessels suspended in the well, or in the coolest clean place in your home or cellar.

Do not keep perishable foods in a hot kitchen or pantry or in a sunny place a moment longer than is necessary.

Dry cold is a better preservative than damp cold.

The dust particles in the air carry molds and germs.

Meat, fish, and milk are ideal breeding grounds for such germs. Keep your food covered so that bacteria and germs will have as little chance as possible to get on your food.

House flies—better called "typhoid flies," are among the dirtiest things that enter our homes. They fly from sewers, privies, and manure heaps, carrying filth on their feet, which they deposit on any food on which they light. Frequently germs of typhoid fever are carried by flies in the filth on their bodies, and in their excrement (fly specks.)

Ordinary cleanliness demands that flies be kept out of our homes and away from our food.

Health protection makes it essential to banish flies. Keep all food covered, or at least screened from these carriers of deadly disease and filth. Destroy flies by every possible means.

Guard Food Against Vermin.

Rats and mice destroy millions of dollars' worth of food and other property every year in homes, on farms and in business establishments. Many rats harbor the germs of bubonic plague. Trap and kill them. Look upon every mouse as an enemy to your property.

Eradicate roaches and house ants. Keep weevils out of cereals.

Keep your food where such pests cannot reach it.

Keep household pets away from food.

Store Vegetables and Fruits Properly

Don't let fresh vegetables or fruits wilt or lose their flavor or begin to rot because they are handled carelessly. Keep perishable vegetables in cool, dry, well-aired, and for most vegetables, dark rather than light places.

Learn how to store potatoes, cabbages, root crops, fruits, and other foods so that they will keep properly for later use.

Don't think that any place in the cellar or pantry is good enough to store food.

Heat, dampness, poor ventilation, bruising or breaking will rapidly make many vegetables rot, ferment, or spoil. Warmth and light make vegetables sprout and this lowers their quality.

VOL. XXXI | ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MAY 17, 1917 | NO. 20

To Name Candidate

The temperance forces of Concord township will meet at the Lutheran church, St. Joe, at 2 p. m. next Sunday afternoon. The purpose of the meeting is to express their choice as to the man whom they will vote for to represent this county in the constitutional convention next January. Dr. B. S. Sheffer, who is township chairman, will attend a county convention of the dry forces, at which the candidate for the county will be agreed to. He will be guided by the sentiment of the voters of the township, as expressed next Sunday afternoon, and do all within his power to nominate the man of their choice; but if he sees that this can not be done, he will be instructed as to the second and the third choices of this township. The county convention will be held at Auburn on Thursday, May 24.

All friends of temperance are urged to attend the meeting at the Lutheran church next Sunday. It is a matter of greatest importance. The pastors of the local churches will be present and make addresses. Ladies are invited to be present.

The choice of the Auburn convention should receive the support of every temperance man. His religious views, his politics, his profession and his place of residence should be forgotten. The election of a temperance delegate to the constitutional convention is God's work; and the Christain who can not lay aside jealousies and prejudices in such a cause should leave out the words, "Thy kingdom come," from the Lord's prayer.

K. of P. Banquet

St. Joe K. of P.'s banqueted their families and a few invited friends last Wednesday evening; and it goes without saying that all had a good time, for the members of the order understand entertaining. A committee of new members, with Paul E. Curie as chairman, was in charge. The others were Walter Zonker, Vernie Monroe, Vern Coburn, Harry Randall, H. I. Garton, Don Hindman, Walter Baker, Lloyd Draggoo and Joe Winebrenner.

A short business session preceded the social part of the evening, and then the doors were thrown open to the guests. The following program was rendered:

K. of P. Opening Ode, - - Audience
Mrs. Hattie Widney, Pianist
Piano Solo, - - - - Edna Jackson
Welcome Address, - - H. M. Widney
Recitation, - - - Miss Zora Garton
Good of Order, - - - H. L. Dunkle
Duett, - F. V. Jackson and E. L. Koch
"Wake Up, America," - Concord Seven
Messrs. and Mmes. Lloyd Draggoo,
W. J. Baker and E. L. Koch and
Mr. F. V. Jackson.

Mr. Widney, in his address, called attention to the moral and benevolent sides of the order, closing with a plea for the attendant virtue, Christianity. Mr. Dunkle spoke on the good the K. of P.'s are doing.

Refreshments were served and a social hour followed, in the midst of which—

The expected happened:

The lights went out.

The remainder of the evening was passed in the light of several lamps and a lantern, not very brilliant, but more dependable than the electric lights.

HIS METHODS

WALTER G. DOTY, IN THE PEOPLE'S HOME JOURNAL

When Cupid makes a flank attack,
He doesn't always use his bow;
More deadly than his darts, alack,
Are certain dimples that I know.
'Tis often charming hats and gowns
That give his aim efficiency,
And often he his victim downs
By means of eyes used skilfully.

A fleeting tear that gleams and clings,
A flash of laughter or a pout—
Ah! who can tell how much these things
Have often helped his weapons out?
With flattery he lassoes some,
With wealth he often baits a hook;
And where's the man who won't succumb
When Cupid takes the part of cook?

Them Lights Is "Bum"

There's many a slip in a kiss on the lip.—Slams xcix, 13.

The Solid Young Man started out to keep a date with the Dearest Girl. He wore his best smile and carried a wabbly heart. The momentous question was to be asked that night!

As the Solid Young Man walked along the streets of St. Joe he accumulated an assortment of bruises on his shins and skinned his nose on an electric light pole.

Was the Solid Young Man dazed by the St. Joe lights? Oh, no! he was dazed by St. Joe darkness.

For there was no lights a-shinin',
Where them lights ought to be!

"Love is blind," is an old saying. It applies to St. Joe, where everything, love included, is blind after nightfall.

The Solid Young Man's thoughts wandered from the Dearest Girl. They were centered on his center of gravity; and the maintenance of his equilibrium on a street beset with hitching posts and pitfalls, where electric lights are mockeries hanging from menacing poles, kept his mind busy but did not improve his vocabulary.

Did the Solid Young Man "lightly turn to thoughts of love?" Nix and aber nit! You wouldn't think so if you had seen him, which you couldn't. You wouldn't think so if you had heard him, which you could—a block away.

All things have an ending, even a trip through St. Joe when the lights are supposed to be on, but ain't. He met the Dearest Girl He saw her, even in the darkness—rare, radiant, angelic; her form a symphony, her smile beatific, her breath perfume laden (spearmint), her feet—well, never mind her feet. A mud puddle had lurked in her pathway. No need to waste good poetry on her feet. There was nothing poetic about them.

When the Dearest Girl placed her hand on the Solid Young Man's arm, he felt a creepy sensation in the lumbar region, as if a stream of ice water had reversed the laws of gravity and was trickling up his backbone. Then the young couple strolled down Ecstasy street and up Foolish avenue. They strolled without thinking; and both, with charming innocence, expressed surprise when the school house steps were reached.

For a wonder, the seating capacity wasn't overtaxed! They had it all to themselves. Hurray and hurrah!

The two sat on the steps in silence; and a spooning couple can be about the silentest beings on earth when everything is in good working order. One of the Solid Young Man's arms was where goody-goody people would say it should not have been, but it was just where he wanted it to be and where the Dearest Girl was dead willing it should be. He had a strangle hold on her waist, and she cuddled up to him until she exerted all her ability as a cuddler; and, take it from me, she was some cuddler, too; and he was some hugger, second only to a boa constrictor. A pair of steam derricks, working from opposite directions, couldn't have pulled them apart.

Smack!

What's that? Oh, nothing! Just tuning up their instruments.

Then followed a sound like an old suction pump hesitating about going to work. This was succeeded by a gurgly noise and two prolonged um-m-m-m's. Bees have no monopoly on sweet harvesting!

"Dearest, do you love me?"

The Dearest Girl made no verbal reply. She answered by cuddling up to the Solid Young Man (that's figurative language—she couldn't do it without fracturing a rib or two.

Next the Solid Young Man slipped a ring on the third finger of the Dearest Girl. She giggled and kissed the ring; and he, not to be outdone in foolishness, kissed both ring and finger. Finding this to be a pleasant occupation, he drew her face up toward his a supreme effort.

Bang!

The electric lights came on so quick they fairly snapped.

The Solid Young Man saw a pair of kissable lips close to his, but they were surrounded by a black rim, which extended up to a head of kinky hair and down to a neckband. St. Joe darkness makes us all of one hue. He sprang to his feet.

"Hully gee!" That's all he said.

"See heah, young man, I done weah yo' 'gagement ring an' I won't hab mah 'fections trified with."

But the Solid Young Man was out of hearing. The Dearest Girl of some colored brother giggled, cut a pigeon wing and held the ring up to the light.

"Yo' shuah some spa'kler," she said.

The Solid Youg Man was going east like a frightened cyclone, headed for Ohio and safety. He ran until he crossed the state line; and then he kept on two miles further, for fear the map had been revised and Indiana extended to the eastward. Then he stopped. He was shy two things—his breath and twelve bits, the value of the ring. But he still had strength enough to shake his fists in the direction of Hicksville.

MORAL.—When you get what you want in St. Joe at night time, you are likely to get what you don't want.

GIVES OUT RULES ON HOW TO LIVE TO AN OLD AGE

Dr. William S. Salder of Chicago, in a talk on "health and efficiency" before the German club in the hotel Sherman at Chicago, a few days ago gave these "ten secrets of health":

1. Eat enough; avoid too much meat.
2. Breathe and exercise enough to breathe properly and deeply.
3. Drink eight or ten glasses of water daily.
4. Chew your food well and eat some raw food each meal.
5. If you do not sweat naturally each day, be sure to sweat artifically once or twice a week.
6. See that the bowels move twice a day.
7. Lead the outdoor life; if indoors keep air humidified.
8. Form the habit of "doing it to-day.
9. Have a good fad; be temperate.
10. Have a good religion; what is good for the soul is good for the body.

And, then, if a germ doesn't get him or a brick hit him on the head, or if he doesn't just "die, anyhow," a man may live to a good old age. That is, he may do so. Anyhow, the rules are pretty sure to do no harm, and are well worth trying.

NO PLACE TO HANG PICTURE

Child Could Not Carry Out Teacher's Instructions Because His Home Had No Walls.

A young teacher of this city, home from kindergarten work in a large eastern city, told this story, which she vouches for. The teacher was anxious to improve the home life of the little foreigners she taught, so she bought some inexpensive pictures and gave one to each child, asking that the picture be hung on the wall of the home. One little foreigner took the picture with evident reluctance, and the next day brought it back and handed it to the teacher.

"Why didn't you hang it on the wall like the others did, instead of bringing it back?" teacher asked. In the explanation that followed it developed that the youngster lived in a large loft-room, with four other families besides its own. Each of the other families had a wall, while the kindergartner's family lived in the middle of the room, hence had no place to hang pictures. —Indianapolis News.

DO NOT MARKET HALF-GROWN HOGS

So Says Prof. Skinner in an Appeal to Farmers of the State of Indiana.

FEED TO 200-POUND MARK

Purdue Animal Expert Begins to Organize Forces in Every County for Bringing the Hog Men and the Holders of Corn Together.

Indianapolis.—The live-stock, husbandry division of the Purdue agricultural station, has begun to organize what might be called second-line trenches in the patriotic movement in Indiana to meet, with greater corn and pork crops, the appeal for war service.

Prof. J. H. Skinner, the genius who has produced champion steers, and prize-winning hogs and sheep for the international live-stock shows, has set on foot the organization of live-stock exchanges over the state. The idea is that the porker that comes to market developed only up to 100 pounds is an economic waste. It should not come to market until it is a 200-pounder or more. Skinner, however, faces the existing conditions. The farmers and hog men have the 100-pounders. They are short on corn. Corn is very high. The market is offering astounding prices for those half-developed hogs. It is the easy, certain way out. The 100-pounder is worth $15 to $16; and there is no risk of cholera or other loss later.

Under this pressure many farmers are unloading at a time when the world shortage of foodstuffs and meats demand fully developed cattle, hogs and sheep.

Cannot Get Together.

Within twenty miles of the hog owner who is short of feed, there are probably several farmers or landholders who have feed, who have money, and who really want, or would take those hogs and carry them to 200, or even 250 pounds development. There is no organization to bring these two men or classes of farmers together, while the market road is always open and definite.

The idea that is being pushed here now, side by side with the appeal, previously published, to care for the spring litters as they generally are not cared for, to wean them early and breed for early fall litters, is to effect an organization in every county that will serve as a hog and live stock exchange.

In the counties in which there are county agents this work is going forward. In other counties the county committees organized are being urged to open offices. The work mapped out contemplates an intimate knowledge of the live stock in the county, the people who have hogs but who are short of feed and want to sell, and those who are ready to buy.

All things being equal, it is thought that the farmers will sell to the people who will fatten the hog, in preference to selling to market; and this idea of giving national "service" is to be advocated. The development of the hogs to a good marketable size means more money for the community.

Loss Falls on Nation.

There is, however, back of all this, the economic loss that falls on the nation that already is hard pressed for food and that has the right to demand that life, capable of producing food, shall not be stopped at the half-production point. From the national and world food-supply point of view, such a policy is equivalent to a policy of raising only 30 bushels of corn on land that should produce 60 bushels.

It is proposed that these county or district exchanges be equipped with telephones so that it will be an easy matter for seller or buyer to get together—just as simple as for the seller to call up the market buyer.

"There is another thing," says Skinner, "that must be taken up. Now one-third of our land area in Indiana is in the hands of tenants. Often the landlord is an absentee. It has become the custom to rely on grain crops, and the landlords are pushing this and sacrificing stock. The tenants are not being given pasturage or hog lots. The result is that the tenant often is limited to an impossible space for hogs or other live stock. He is bound hand and foot by his landlord. As a matter of patriotic duty we now appeal to the landlord to respond to the national call for meat, and to give his tenant not only greater privileges, but also to go into partnership with him in hogs or live stock. It is a good investment. The landowner certainly is secured against loss, and it will help the nation and state out of a very serious situation."

Calls Meeting of Clergy.

Gov. James P. Goodrich has issued a proclamation calling on the clergy of Indiana to meet at the statehouse Tuesday, May 15, at two o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of determining what course the churches of the state can best pursue to aid in the present war crisis. It is understood that plans may be evolved, among others, whereby direct appeals from the pulpits of the state may be made to the housewives of Indiana for greater and more intelligent conservation of the food supply.

Take Up Coal-Shortage Problem.

The public service commissioner of Indiana, after a second organization meeting, took up plans for the solution of Indiana coal-shortage problems.

Ernest I. Lewis, chairman of the commission by virtue of the election in the body, William J. Wood, formerly chairman of the old railroad commission of Indiana and of late years connected with the interstate commerce commission, and John W. McCardle, who has dealt with coal problems from the dealer's standpoint for years, determined to make the solution of the coal-shortage problems the paramount issue with the new commission. No other problem will be handled, unless imperatively necessary, until the body has found some way to handle the coal trouble.

View of Commissioners.

The commissioners, including Edwin Corr and Charles A. Edwards, the continuing members, believe that the coal situation in Indiana is the fundamental utility situation at the present time to be regulated, and for fear that Hoosiers will face hardships during the coming fall and winter unless something is done now, the commission is determined to use all the power it has to remedy the coal shortage, in so far as it affects Indiana coal.

The efforts of the commission are to be correlated with those of all other state or federal bodies that are seeking to solve the coal situation.

Officers' Reserve Camp Open.

Col. Edwin F. Glenn, who is in command of the training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, inspected the construction work under way, which includes 60 temporary barracks for the housing of the men of the officers' reserve corps and the troops that are to report here for training during the summer. Colonel Glenn expects to see 40,000 men in training here within the next few months.

The officers' reserve training camp has already opened.

Other regular army outfits are also to be assigned here. He says that considerable difficulty will be experienced in the handling of transport material, because of the lack of trucks. He hopes to get the interest of the railroads in bringing to Indianapolis a truck train now at El Paso.

Colonel Glenn came to Indinanapolis from Fort Douglas, Ariz., where he commanded the Eighteenth infantry. A Washington dispatch says that engineer corps and medical officers from the regular army have been assigned for instruction work at Fort Benjamin Harrison as follows: Medical corps, Maj. Harry L. Gilchrist, Maj. Ernest L. Ruffner and Maj. J. W. Grissinger; engineer crops, Lieut. Gen. George M. Hoffman, Capt. Albert K. B. Lyman, Lieut. Alexander P. Cronkhite.

Seek Greater Efficiency.

Definite action for accomplishing in a large way plans for making the In-Indianapolis chamber of commerce more efficient in all lines of business and civic betterment was taken by the directors of the chamber when they authorized the creation of an "efficiency committee" recommended by William Fortune, president of the organization.

The following is the recommendation submitted to the directors by Mr. Fortune:

"With the aim of making the Indianapolis chamber of commerce the most efficient organization in the United States, in the development of business interests, I recommend that there be appointed a committee of five on chamber of commerce efficiency, whose duty it shall be to carefully examine plans of work which have brought the largest beneficial results to other cities; to make a study of what appear to be the most important needs in the development and improvement of the business interests of Indianapolis and to submit definite recommendations and plans for work which should be undertaken here and for improvement of the efficiency of this organization."

Urge Price Fixing.

About the time a bill was introduced in congress at Washington to authorize the administration to fix minimum and maximum prices for food, clothing, fuel and other supplies throughout the country, a resolution was introduced at the meeting of the Indiana committee on food production and conservation, at the statehouse, asking the administration to announce promptly the policy it proposes to adopt in regard to fixing such prices, and recommending that if a policy of arbitrary price fixing is adopted prices shall be based on the present cost of production, and that it shall be done by a commission composed in part, at least, of men who possess personal knowledge of what it costs to produce foodstuffs.

The resolution was introduced by Ralph W. Moss, chairman of the committee and former congressman from the Fifth district. The resolution was adopted and forwarded to the president, to Secretary of Agriculture Houston and the Indiana members of the senate and house.

Secures Help of Teachers.

Governor Goodrich, addressing teachers and educators of the state meeting here in conference, appealed to the teachers of every school in Indiana to preach the doctrine of economy—economy in food, dress and all useful and material things.

The conference of educators had been called by the governor, co-operating with Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction. About 200 persons were present, including presidents of colleges, county and city superintendents and school teachers.

DOCTORS AGAINST ALCOHOL.

"I shall not soon forget the shock experienced when a physician of high standing in Michigan confessed to me that time and time again he had killed patients by the use of acohol while still under the old delusion that alcohol was a stimulant," says Mr. Henry Stauffer, superintendent of the Fox River Valley Efficiency league. "The common sense of mankind rightly condones the practice of this man because he did the best he and the profession knew at the time; but the time of ignorance on this subject is past."

Mr. Stauffer sent an open letter to the physicians in his state, asking this question: "Knowing what you must know of the tragedy of alcohol, how can you for a single day lend the influence of your example to its use as a beverage in your community. As a result, 111 doctors willingly signed for publication the following statement, which is being circulated:

"We positively condemn the use of all alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, because, by their effect on the germ plasm they curse the unborn child; because even their moderate use has been proven to reduce the efficiency of the user; and, because in multitudes of cases, the continued use of alcohol in moderation proves to be impossible. The moderate drinker is a social menace."

HOTELKEEPERS, TAKE NOTICE!

It has long been one of the stock arguments against prohibition that hotels could not be profitably conducted without a bar, remarks the Union Signal. In some of the campaign states hotel keepers' associations were formed to work against prohibition. After a little more than one year's experience in a dry state, the New Washington Improvement company of Seattle is about to build a new wing, doubling the capacity and gross earning power of the New Washington hotel, already one of the largest, if not the largest, hotels in the city. The company has floated a bond issue of $600,000 for this purpose. The manager of the hotel states: "Business at the New Washington for the last two years has far exceeded our facilities for handling it and during the heavy tourist travel of the summer we have been forced to turn away hundreds of guests." Thus is it proved that it is not in search of booze that tourists tour, and that a hotel does not need to resolve itself into a saloon in order to become a paying investment.

VIEWPOINT OF DISTILLER.

Since the introduction of anti-whisky legislative measures the love of the distiller for his brother, the brewer, has grown cold. The following is a sample of what the whisky men are saying:

"Until recent years, at least, it was the custom of Milwaukee parents to take their children into the various beer gardens of the Cream City and fill their little stomachs with 'suds.' The high degree of intelligence portrayed in these beer faces would not have brought forth envy on the part of Plato or Homer. We recall the time when the employees of one of the large Milwaukee breweries threatened to strike because their daily allowance of beer was to be cut from four gallons to two gallons. It would thus be seen that there must be something about beer that perpetuates the thirst. But, at the same time, it is admitted by the brewers that beer is a genuine 'temperance' drink."

FAMILY TROUBLES.

Judge William N. Gemmil, Chicago, formerly of the court of domestic relations, states that at least 75 per cent of all family desertions are due directly or indirectly to the use of intoxicating drinks. "All our efforts to suppress crime in the community will be futile," he says, "so long as we license 7,250 places where boys are turned into bandits and husbands into wife-beaters."

PROTECT THE BOYS.

We have with great success made a practice of not leaving arsenic and strychnine, and typhoid and tuberculosis germs lying around for our children to be destroyed by. Treat John Barleycorn in the same way. Stop him. Don't let him lie around, licensed and legal, to pounce upon your youth. It is the healthy, normal boys, now born or being born for whom I write.—Jack London, in "John Barleycorn."

DISTILLERS TO MAKE ALCOHOL.

Four large Kentucky distilleries are to make alcohol for industrial purposes, instead of making whisky. They expect to export large quantities of alcohol to Europe.

THE MEN WHO WANT SALOONS.

On a petition asking for an election to bring saloons into Fort Covington, N. Y., in March, there were 43 signatures. Of these, 11 or more than one-fourth, were the names of men who could not read and write, but who made their marks, which were acknowledged by other men who could read and write.

The taxes paid by signers of the petition, including all the X's, amounted to .0044 per cent of all the taxes paid in the town, slightly more than four-tenths of 1 per cent.

PREPARE MORE LAND --GROW MORE FOOD

"Seed and Feed" the Slogan of the Year.

The papers are filled with the appeal for soldiers, sailors and farmers, and all are timely, all are necessary. The sailor is needed to man the ships that protect the shores, police the seas and clear the ocean of tormenting and meddlesome masked buccaneers, to give help to the allies, to make more efficient the present fighting units that are keeping free the sea lanes and ocean routes. The soldier is required to keep alive and intact the unity of the nation and the freedom of the world, to protect the lives of its citizens from incursions without and raids within, to guard the honor and preserve the dignity of the great United States, to render not only sentimental but practical assistance to those who for two and a half years on the battlefields of Flanders and the steppes of the East have been fighting for the freedom of the world against a dominant autocratic and militarist Prussianism, which, were it to become successful, would mean autocratism, militarism and Prussianism, and a "get-off-the-sidewalkism" over the entire world. The allies are proud to welcome these new accessions to the fighting forces, which mean an earlier termination of the war and the dawn of an era that will be historic, one that we will all be proud that we lived in. Throughout all Canada, Great Britain, France, and all the allied countries, when the news was received that the United States had entered the war, a thrill went up and down the nation's sides, and the pulses throbbed with a new life, keenly appreciative of the practical sentiment that had brought to their sides an ally of the strength and virility of the United States.

But the soldier and the sailor need to be fed, and therefore the cry for agricultural enlistment. The strength of the fighting man must be maintained. In his absence from the field there comes the necessity for provision to take his place. The appeal for farm help is well timed, opportune and important. There are vacant lands aplenty in the United States that, given a fair opportunity under competent advisement and reasonable help, will produce abundantly. Western Canada also provides an excellent field for the prosecution of work in growing wheat and other grains, and while it is not the desire of the Canadian Government to draw from the resources of the United States, believing that it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to do all he possibly can to build up the stores of depleted foods and making use of every energy at home, the wish is to lay before the public the fact that Canada has millions of acres of excellent land capable of producing wonderful crops. If for any reason the reader, having patriotism and a love of his country in his heart, and a desire to forward the cause of the allies, cannot avail himself of the opportunities afforded in the United States, Western Canada will be glad to render him any assistance it can in locating him on its vacant areas, where large crops can be grown at minimum of cost. Let us grow the grain, raise the cattle, produce the food to feed our soldiers, our sailors and provide food for our allies, no matter whether it is done to the North or to the South of the boundary line that in the object in view should not be known as a boundary. Let us keep up the spirit of patriotism, whether it be growing grain in the United States or in Canada, but Canada, fully alive to the necessity, joins in the appeal of its allies—the United States—for more food and more food.—Advertisement.

AN OPERATION AVERTED

Philadelphia, Pa.—"One year ago I was very sick and I suffered with pains in my side and back until I nearly went crazy. I went to different doctors and they all said I had female trouble and would not get any relief until I would be operated on. I had suffered for four years before this time, but I kept getting worse the more medicine I took. Every month since I was a young girl I had suffered with cramps in my sides at periods and was never regular. I saw your advertisement in the newspaper and the picture of a woman who had been saved from an operation and this picture was impressed on my mind. The doctor had given me only two more days to make up my mind so I sent my husband to the drug store at once for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and believe me, I soon noticed a change and when I had finished the third bottle I was cured and never felt better. I grant you the privilege to publish my letter and am only too glad to let other women know of my cure."—Mrs. Thos. McGonigal, 3432 Hartville Street, Phila., Pa.

Host—So sorry, but luckily none of it has gone on the carpet.

YES! MAGICALLY!
CORNS LIFT OUT
WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 20

THE IMPORTANCE OF SELF-CONTROL—TEMPERANCE LESSON.

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 28:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things.—I Cor. 9:25.

Wine in the Scriptures is spoken of under four aspects. First, social, that as illustrated by its use at the marriage in Cana. We must not, however, confuse this wine with the spirituous, strong drink of this present day. Second, medicinal (Prov. 31:6-7; I Tim. 5:23). These passages do not command us to use it as such, and God has very graciously revealed to us in modern medical research the futility of the use of alcohol in the matter of medicine as a remedy. Third, sacrificial wine (Matt. 26:27-29; Luke 22:17-20), and, fourth wine is spoken about as productive of the woes of men (See Amos 6:1; Heb. 2:15; Prov. 23:20). It is also mentioned by way of contrast (See Eph. 5:18).

The Scriptures speak of drunkards in four different ways: (1) They are to be stoned (Deut. 21:20); (2) Drunkards lead to poverty (Prov. 23:21); (3) Drunkards are to be separated from other men (I, Cor. 5:11); (4) they are to be finally separated from God (I Cor. 6:9).

Abstinence from strong drink is enjoined in the Scriptures under three heads: (1) the priest and Nazarite (Num. 6:3; Luke 1:15); (2) the ruler (Prov. 31:4); (3) those who are to worship Jehovah (Lev. 10:3).

This particular lesson is taken from a portion of Isaiah's prophecy where he is anticipating what is about to happen to Samaria, and uttering his warnings unto Judah.

I. The Steps of Intemperance. First, Disgrace and Dishonor (v. 1). The city of Samaria is compared to a chaplet of flowers on a drunkard's brow, which shall be trodden under foot because of his inebriety. Drunkenness seemed to have been so widespread as to become a national sin. Second, Disease and Degeneracy (v. 2). The pride of beauty spoken of in verse one is to "fall to the earth." This glorious beauty was after all only a "fading flower" (I Pet. 1:24). The coming of the Assyrians upon Samaria is described in a three-fold way: (1) As a "tempest of hail"; (2) as a "destroying storm;" (3) as a "tempest of mighty waters overflowing." The thought contained is that of widespread and overwhelming destruction. Back of this work of devastation and destruction and desolation was the wrath of God against sin (Ch. 2:4-9). All earthly pride shall be trodden under foot. Samaria, "a fading flower," was to be greedily eaten up by the oncoming enemy.

II. Those Reached by Intemperance. Strong drink causes men to err in their conduct, in their moral insight, in their judgments. It reaches the beautiful (v. 1); it reaches the learned (v. 7); it reaches those in authority; in fact all classes. It leads men to the depths of degradation and to the loss of their wills (v. 8); it makes men to become beasts, wallowing in their own vomit. Not only Samaria, but "these also" (vv. 7 and 8), that is people of Jerusalem have erred through wine and strong drink. Even the priests and the prophets had and do so now (See Ch. 56:10-12; Micah 2:11). The priests were especially inexcusable because of the plain directness of God's word (Lev. 10:9-10; Ezekiel 44:21). The result of their intemperance was that they utterly failed in their official acts. They reeled in vision and stumbled in judgment. The use of wine and strong drink made their social gatherings filthy and disgusting. Temperance is the habit of abstaining from everything that destroys. It is the control and right use of God's good gifts for service. Intemperance is lack of control or the wrong use of God's gifts in self-indulgence.

III. The Lesson in Contrast. Jerusalem vs. Samaria. Samaria's crown of pride was not the glory of God. Its beauty was a fading flower (v. 4), his wisdom contemned through the ignorance of Samaria (vv. 6, 7, 12), his strength versus their weakness and wickedness (vv. 6, 13). God teaches by contrast as well as by direct precept. Verses nine and ten may be taken as a mocking answer of the people to God's prophet. Isaiah intimates that the time to begin our instruction is in childhood (v. 9), that precept must be upon precept, and line upon line, here a little and there a little. There never is a time when we can let up in this struggle against the mighty evil of intemperance.

Take as a reply (v. 9) this would seem to indicate that God took them to be babies just weaned. If the prophet, himself, is the speaker, then Jehovah is represented as teaching knowledge to babes and not to the self-sufficient. It is these whom he "makes to understand his message" (R. V.), and the method of his teaching is precept upon precept. If we will not hear God's loving and patient call to repentance, he will speak to us through cruel enemies. If we will not teach our children, if we will not keep everlastingly agitating this question, he will use other means (v. 11).

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

BREAKER BOATS.

"The Sea Fairies were calling to the Sand Fairies to join the fun," said Daddy, "and this is what they were saying:

" 'Oh, out in the ocean,
" 'There is glorious motion,
" 'We toss and we play
" 'The whole live-long day,
" 'Though sometimes we rest,
" 'And stay in our nest.
" 'It's under the foam,
" 'Where always we roam.
" 'But now we're so gay,
" 'Come join us, we pray.'

"And sure enough the Sand Fairies went rushing out to the Sea Fairies. Didn't the Sea Fairies laugh as they fell right over them with their boats of foam in which they were riding.

" 'Ah,' said the Sea Fairies, 'aren't you glad you joined us? Our boats are going so well today. There are no boats in the world like the Breaker Boats.'

" 'They seem to have rather rough names,' said the Sand Fairies.

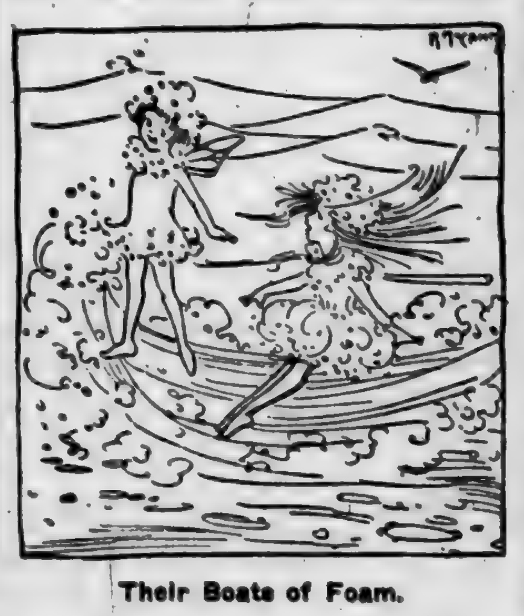
" 'Of course,' said the Sea Fairies, 'And they are good and rough, too. Although of course it is the ocean that helps. These boats will not come out unless the ocean is just right. They do what the ocean tells them to. We think old Mother Ocean is pretty powerful. She rules the waves. She rules the breakers. And she rules the boats which we call the breaker boats. Some people just call them breakers, and others call them high waves or angry waves, or waves covered with white caps and foam.'

" 'Here, here, here,' whistled a voice from above. It was the voice of old Mr. Wind.

" 'Now, don't you start saying that Mother Ocean does all the work. I do some of it myself. I am a friend of Mother Ocean, I am, and I like to help her.'

" 'Oh, dear; oh, dear,' laughed the Sea Fairies. 'The Wind must always get some praise, too.'

" 'Of course I must,' said the Wind. 'There are so many people who abuse me. They talk about the "frightful wind," and the "terrible wind," and the "great gale" that I am blowing up.'



Their Boats of Foam.

" 'Oh, well,' said the Sea Fairies, 'you can't please everyone. We're satisfied, so that's enough praise for you today, Mr. Wind. And we know you help Mother Ocean. But we like to tease you sometimes by giving Mother Ocean all the praise. It never fails to make you very mad!'

" 'I suppose that is what you like,' said Mr. Wind.

" 'Of course,' said the Sea Fairies. 'Then you blow up into a rage and we have more fun than ever, and the breaker boats go so wonderfully.'

" 'I should say they did,' said one poor little Sand Fairy, who had been knocked over and over all the time the Sea Fairies and the wind had been talking. For the breaker boats had gone on with many of the other Sea Fairies in them. The Sea Fairies wore their fluffy white dresses and their green shoes and stockings. Such gorgeous green shoes and stockings as they were! And their collars and hats were like glorious white ruffles—all made by old Mother Ocean.

"All of the Sea Fairies were now back in their boats and how the breaker boats did toss and break! They roared with the fun, and the low, deep voice of Mother Ocean murmured all the time:

" 'That is right, my children; enjoy yourselves. You are so beautiful, so young, so active. It does my old watery heart good to see you.'

"And the Sea Fairies went on rolling back and forth in the breaker boats.

"They tossed over the sand by the shore and the Sand Fairies who had come out to play with them were moved this way and that. But they liked it, for the breaker boats like the Sand Fairies and sometimes bring them queer gifts from old Mother Ocean's storeroom, deep down in the sea.

"And while the Sea Fairies and the Sand Fairies were enjoying the wonderful breaker boats, the children by the shore were saying:

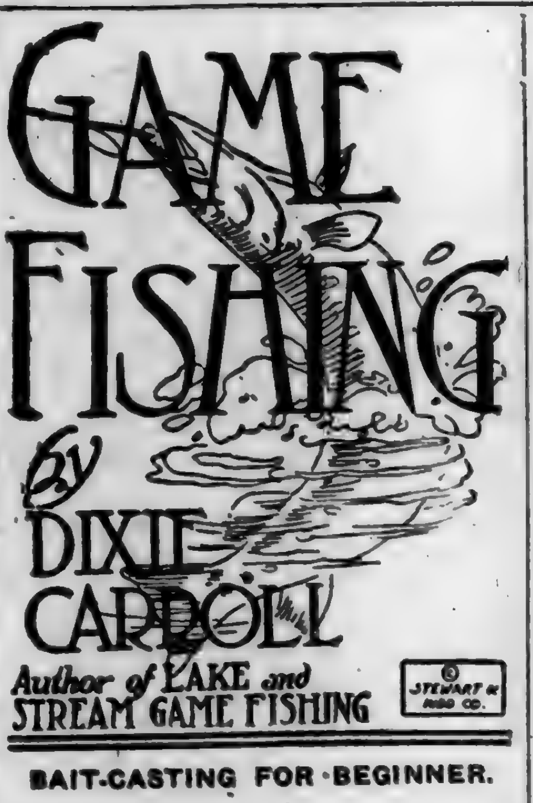
" 'Oh, how high the breakers are today!' "

Mamma Ought to Know.

"My Aunt Sallie is so fussy," said Delia to her dearest friend.

"What's she so fussy about?"

"She's so pa'ticlar since she's got a beau mamma says there is no livin' with her, but mamma says just wait till she is married and she won't fuss any more about how she looks and how the house looks, 'n all girls are that way when they have beaux, mamma says."



GAME FISHING

BAIT-CASTING FOR BEGINNER.

My Dear Buck:

For your practice work or rather the back-yard casting, before you try out the real stuff, all you need of your bait-casting tackle is your rod, steel or split bamboo, 5 or 5½ footer as you prefer; 50-yard spool of waterproof soft square braided silk No. 6 line; quadruple multiplying reel and a casting plug.

Joint your rod and place the reel in the reel seat right above the grip, with the reel on top of the rod, reel handle to the right. Run the line through the tip and guides, wind it evenly on the reel and loop on the plug at the end.

At a distance of say 30 feet from where you intend to stand while making the cast, peg down a small piece of paper, say about eight inches square, for a target. Think this is the home of a fine frisky bass, it adds to the interest of the game.

You are all ready now, get in the box, 30 feet from the target and face it. Take the rod in your right hand, let the plug hang down about six inches from the tip, reel on top with the thumb pressing on the line wound on the spool of the reel, the fingers of course around the grip of the rod. Before bringing the rod back over the shoulder to start the cast, twist the wrist to the left enough to bring the top of the reel towards your body, the spool of the reel nearly vertical. In this position swing the rod back over the right shoulder until the plug hangs on a line with your belt, the rod will then be at about a 45 degree angle with the ground and your hand near your right ear. This much is for position, the cast starts from this point, wherein it differs from fly-casting which starts from the first upward sweep.

Keep Thumb Pressure on Reel.

From this position swing the rod forward with a swift firm sweep, increasing the speed as the rod swings forward—all this time the thumb pressure stays on the line wound on the reel. As the rod sweeps to a perpendicular position, release the thumb pressure—but not entirely—and out shoots the plug carrying the line from the reel.

Keep your eye on the plug, although it's a hundred to one shot that you will watch the reel instead. When the plug is still in the air, just before it hits the ground, press the thumb down firmly on the reel, which stops it from revolving. If you fail to do this, old man, the reel will keep on turning from its momentum, and having no heavy plug in the air to pull it along, the line will snarl up on the reel and you will be introduced to your first "back-lash," with which you will become well acquainted, anyway, as you get along in the game.

If your plug did a pretty flight straight up in the air, you released your thumb pressure before the rod was perpendicular, if it did a Brodie right down into the ground in front of you, then you failed to release the thumb pressure soon enough. Remember this point, the thumb pressure is never entirely removed from the line on the reel, the lighter pressure on the line keeps a "pull" on the bait and prevents back-lashes. "Bad cess to 'em." Always jam the thumb down hard just before the bait lands, stop the rod in its sweep when it is much higher than the target and keep your eyes on the plug. As it flies out and settles, slowly lower the tip of the rod, keeping the plug, line and rod on a line as much as possible, as it saves friction on the guides and makes your line last longer, as well as increases the distance to your cast.

Reel Line in Smoothly.

You have now made your first cast and upon how carefully you reel in your line depends the success or failure of your next cast. Shift the rod to the left hand, grasping it above the reel, circling it from the underside, with the line between the forefinger and the thumb which guides the line across the spool of the reel and back again until it is all reeled in. Don't let it pile up on the ends of the spool, which it has an ornery habit of doing, or build up into a hump in the middle. If you do, you can check off the next cast as a dead one.

Try to reel it in as level as possible. Of course while actually fishing you will always watch your bait while reeling in the line, especially when you are casting among lily pads and windfalls, but in the practice work watch the reel. This will save you lots of time and fish later. After a little practice you can watch the plug, remembering not to slow up the thumb and finger in guilding the line smoothly onto the reel, or it will pile up before you know it and bring back your old friend, Mr. G. W. Back-Lash, Esq.

THE 3 D'S IN DODD'S

Mr. Robert W. Ferguson, Hingham, Mass., writes: I suffered from kidney disorder for years. Had incessant backache and trouble. Nearly died from it at one time while in Vancouver, but overcame it by a persistent use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Finally I was completely cured. I occasionally use the remedy now in order to keep the kidneys regulated. I have the highest praise for Dodd's. Be sure to get "DODD'S," the name with the three D's for deranged, disordered, diseased kidneys, just as Mr. Ferguson did. No similar named article will do.—Adv.

Save a Slice of Bread a Day.

If every household in the United States will save a slive of bread a day, instead of wasting it as happens now, there will be 14,000,000 ounces of flour saved daily, which is equivalent to 875,000 pounds, or a million one pound loaves of bread. For a full year this slight saving of wasted foodstuff would total 319,000,000 pounds of flour, 1,500,000 barrels, or enough to make 365,000,000 loaves.

As it takes about 4½ bushels of wheat to make a barrel of ordinary flour this waste amouts to 7,000,000 nine-tenths bushels of wheat are bushels of wheat. Fourteen and raised on the average avre throughout the United States, so the fruit of 470,000 acres is being thrown away by the wastage of a slice of bread a day in every American household.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive glands are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

ARE YOU GUILTY?

A FARMER carrying an express package from a big mail-order house was accosted by a local dealer.

"Why didn't you buy that bill of goods from me? I could have saved you the express, and besides you would have been patronizing a home store, which helps pay the taxes and builds up this locality."

The farmer looked at the merchant a moment and then said:

"Why don't you patronize your home paper and advertise? I read it and didn't know that you had the stuff I have here."

EVERYBODY HIT BY THE NEW WAR TARIFF MEASURE

Horizontal 10 Per Cent Increase in Existing Duties and on Imports Now Free.

INCOMES ARE HIT HARD

New Revenues Will Produce Total of $1,800,000,000 for the Year—Exemption Limits on Incomes Reduced to $1,000 for Single Men and $2,000 for Married Men.

Washington.—The war revenue bill, largest in the nation's history, estimated to produce $1,800,000,000 for the expenses of the war, was completed by the ways and means committee Tuesday night and introduced in the house Wednesday.

If the framers overlooked any tangible article upon which it is possible to levy a tax, it was not because of any desire to do so.

Incomes, inheritances, business profits, amusements, liquors, tobacco, automobiles, moving pictures, baseball games, medicines, letter postage, transportation and jewelry are among some of the things which will feel the burden of taxation.

Tariff Will Yield $200,000,000.

The committee found it necessary to go to the tariff to make up a deficit of something like $200,000,000. This was done by an agreement to a tax of 10 per cent upon all articles now on the free list and 10 per cent additional upon all articles now upon the dutiable list.

Income-tax increases as made public by Chairman Kitchin follow:

Taxes for the year ending December 31, 1916, have been increased exactly one-third. These taxes are due in June.

Exemption limits have been reduced to $1,000 for single men and $2,000 for married men.

The normal tax on new classes of incomes to be taxed, those between $1,000 and $3,000 for single men and between $2,000 and $4,000 for married men, has been fixed at 2 per cent.

Normal taxes on all incomes formerly taxed, those above $3,000 for single men and $4,000 for married men, have been increased from 2 to 4 per cent.

Increases in All Surtaxes.

The increased surtaxes are as follows:

$ 5,000 to	$ 7,500	1 per cent
7,500 to	10,000	2 per cent
10,000 to	12,500	3 per cent
12,500 to	15,000	4 per cent
15,000 to	20,000	5 per cent
20,000 to	40,000	6 per cent
40,000 to	60,000	8 per cent
60,000 to	80,000	11 per cent
80,000 to	100,000	14 per cent
100,000 to	150,000	17 per cent
150,000 to	200,000	20 per cent
200,000 to	250,000	24 per cent
250,000 to	300,000	27 per cent
300,000 to	500,000	30 per cent
500,000 and upwards		37 per cent

The inheritance tax starts with one-half of 1 per cent as the basic tax on all estates of $50,000 or less. The remainder of the schedule is applied to the various excesses in graduation as follows:

Inheritance Tax Scale.

On excess of more than $50,000, but not exceeding $150,000, 1 per cent.

On excess of more than $150,000, but not exceeding $250,000, 1½ per cent.

On excess of more than $250,000, but not exceeding $450,000, 2 per cent.

On excess of more than $450,000, but not exceeding $1,000,000, 2½ per cent.

On excess of more than $1,000,000, but not exceeding $2,000,000, 3 per cent.

On excess of more than $2,000,000, but not exceeding $3,000,000, 3½ per cent.

On excess of more than $3,000,000, but not exceeding $4,000,000, 4 per cent.

On excess of more than $4,000,000, but not exceeding $5,000,000, 4½ per cent.

On excess of more than $5,000,000, but not exceeding $8,000,000, 5 per cent.

On excess of more than $8,000,000, but not exceeding $11,000,000 7 per cent.

On excess of more than $11,000,000, but not exceeding $15,000,000, 10 per cent.

On excess of more than $15,000,000, 15 per cent.

The income tax schedules were not changed except for the determination to place an added tax of one-third on individual income taxes which are due in June of this year. Under this provision those who already have paid their income taxes for the year ending December 31, 1916, will have to pay another one-third of their taxes again, and those who have not paid will have to pay one-third more when they do pay.

The tax on excess profits was not changed and stands as printed previously at 16 per cent on profits over 8 per cent and $5,000.

Liquor Touched Up.

The tax on spirits, whisky and similar beverages has been increased to $2.20 per gallon.

The tax on beer is $2.75 per barrel.

The tax on rectifiers is 15 cents per gallon.

The tax on tobacco has been doubled.

The taxes on cigars have been advanced to a new schedule ranging from 50 cents to $10 per thousand retail value.

The bill specifies that purchasers shall pay the 10 per cent tax on amusement, theater, and baseball tickets.

A new tax of 5 per cent on heat, light, and telephone bills was inserted in the bill. Under this section when the householder goes to pay his monthly bills for these articles he will have to pay an additional 5 per cent of the amount of the bills for the support of the government.

The stamp tax on telephone and telegraph messages was fixed at 5 cents on each message the toll of which is more than 15 cents.

Mail Rate Increases.

The second-class mail rate increase was decided on according to the zone system. On motion of Representative Dixon of Indiana, this was reduced to the following:

Two cents a pound on second-class mail in first and second zones.

Three cents a pound on second-class mail in the third and fourth zones.

Five cents a pound on second-class mail in the fifth and sixth zones.

Six cents a pound on second-class mail in the seventh and eighth zones.

Religious, fraternal, labor and agricultural papers not operated for profit were put on a straight one and one-half-cent-a-pound basis.

The old regulations concerning the free distribution of small papers within the county were unchanged.

A tax of 5 per cent was inserted in the bill on pleasure boats.

Musical instruments costing less than $10 each, were exempted from the provisions of the 5 per cent tax on these articles.

EVERY CLASS REACHED BY $1,800,000,000 TAX ACT

Following are some of the articles in daily use which will be taxed under the new war revenue bill:

Chicago's Hull House.

The Hull House, one of the first American settlements, was established in Chicago in September, 1889. It represented no association, but was opened by two women backed by many friends, in the belief that the mere foothold of a house, easily accessible, situated in the midst of the large foreign colonies, would in itself be serviceable in a large city. The Hull House work consists of class lectures, public discussions, trade unions, arts and crafts, a music school, a theater, a gymnasium, various social clubs, a coffee house, a day nursery, etc. Jane Addams, head of the Hull House, was born at Cedarville, Ill., in 1860.

Provision for pay:

Second-class private	$25
First-class private	31
Corporal	32
Sergeant of the line	$$36 and 42
Quartermaster and hospital sergeants	46
First sergeant	50

Safeguards thrown around the army:

Prohibition.

Suppression of the social evil.

Eleven million male citizens from twenty-one to thirty years old, inclusive, will be subject to draft by the president of the United States.

But in order that men under twenty-one and over thirty may serve their country if they so desire, the measure provides for the acceptance of volunteers over eighteen years and under forty years.

The gigantic number of men subject to draft will not all be called to the colors by any means. The proposed law gives authority to the president to draft as many men as he deems necessary to fill up the regular army, the National Guard and the conscription force of 1,000,000 men.

2,001,000 Armed Men.

It is estimated by the war department that as a result of the authority conferred and the action to be taken 2,001,000 officers and men will comprise the military establishment of the United States.

Under the new bill agreed to authority is given to fill up by draft the regular army and the National Guard to war strength, and to raise outside this 1,000,000 men, 500,000 to come as the first quota.

The war strength of the regular army is about 290,000 men. It has now about 135,000 men and is short about 155,000. The National Guard has a war strength of 625,000 men. It has now about 125,000 and is short about 500,000 men.

Therefore, on the first call there can be taken for war service about 655,000 men to fill up gaps in the regular army and National Guard and in addition 500,000 as the first quota of the conscript army of 1,000,000 men.

In the first draft it is possible about 1,155,000 men will be taken for active service, leaving authorization under the present bill to call out immediately 500,000 more for another conscript army.

No Place for Roosevelt.

The action allowing Col. Theodore Roosevelt to enlist volunteers for foreign service has been eliminated.

What the colonel will do now that his pet project is incapable of realization is a question. It is generally understood that President Wilson is absolutely opposed to the idea of a volunteer organization under command of the colonel.

Pay for enlisted men and noncommissioned officers was agreed upon as follows:

Men now receiving less than $21 per month are increased to $31 per month; those who received $24 are increased to $32; men who receive $30, $36 or $40 are increased $6 each; men who receive $45 are increased to $50.

Army Officers Pleased.

Army officers received notice of the age limit with pleasure. They had expected a higher maximum, though they would rather have had the original ages of nineteen to twenty-five.

A new section in the bill authorizes the president to organize and equip three machine-gun companies for each infantry and cavalry brigade and four machine-gun companies and an armored motorcar for each infantry and cavalry division.

An interesting change is that the draft will not be based upon the number of persons "available for service," as first proposed, but upon the population.

A man may register by mail, if necessary. Fraud in registration, examination, etc., is punishable by the same imprisonment, "or, if subject to military law, the individual shall be tried by court- martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct."

Dry Clause Drastic.

The prohibition provision is exceedingly drastic. The president is authorized to make regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors "in or near" military camps. Not only can liquor not be sold or supplied but it will be illegal for any person to have in his possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post or officers' or enlisted men's club.

It will be unlawful for anyone to sell intoxicating liquor, including beer, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform.

Likewise, the social evil is guarded against through the suppression and prevention of the setting up of any houses used for immoral purposes.

The fact that under the authority of congress the president is authorized to call 11,000,000 men to the colors is expected to have a great moral effect in Germany. It is quite true that the entire force he can commandeer at this time will number two and a quarter million. But even this number would constitute a re-enforcement which British and French officers say would assure victory if employed in France.

Could Relieve British.

England to date has raised some 6,000,000 men. With the exception of a couple of million these men are at the front in France, Belgium, Egypt, the Balkans and Mesopotamia.

What the president and Secretary Baker desire first and above all is to train the officers and men. When they are ready to fight the drilled troops of Germany, then probably they will be sent abroad, and not before.

But Germany doubtless will watch with increasing anxiety the preparedness of the American people and will realize that peace will be most desirable and necessary, before they are ready for service in France.

Officers Go to France.

Three army medical officers—Maj. William L. Keller and Capts. Daniel P. Card and George M. Edwards—were assigned to duty at the French military hospital at Ris Orangis, France.

Organization of two reserve air squadrons for the army was authorized by Major General Scott, chief of staff.

The first class at West Point will be graduated August 30, the war department announced, and immediately commissioned to supply 154 highly trained officers to aid in the instruction of the first 500,000 selective draft army to be called to the colors some time in September. Under normal conditions the cadets would have completed their course in June, 1918.

Women Form Committee.

The woman's liberty loan committee has been formed. Announcement to this effect is made by the treasury department.

The committee met in the office of the secretary of the treasury. The members present were Mrs. George Bass, Mrs. Antoinette Funk and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbanks of Chicago, Mrs. Gilford Dudley of Tennessee, Miss Pierce of Kansas City, representing Mrs. Guernsey, and Mrs. John O. Miller of Pittsburgh.

Mr. McAdoo said he expected the committee to aid in inducing the women of the country to invest in the bonds being issued by the government.

MUST HAVE FOOD CONTROL

Herbert C. Hoover, Acknowledged Expert, Makes Report as to Existing Food Conditions.

New York.—Herbert C. Hoover, who recently came from Europe to advise the government on food conditions in Europe, says that without control we may see flour at $20 a barrel before the year is over, but that with control "the present price of flour can be reduced 40 to 50 per cent.

"There is no occasion for a food panic in this country nor any justification for outrageous prices unless the opposition of special interests defeats the president in obtaining the necessary power to control the nations' food fully and adequately," he said, America's problem is not one of famine, for we have now and will have next year a large surplus.

"Our problem is, after the proper protection of our own people, to give to our allies the last ounce of surplus of which we are capable."

KAZAN

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

© THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

KAZAN BECOMES THE FATHER OF THREE WOLF DOG PUPPIES, AND IN TRYING TO DEFEND THEM AND GRAY WOLF HAS A DEADLY FIGHT

Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves the life of Thorpe, his master, and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his instant affection by her kindness. Back in the wilderness, McCready, a guide, beats Thorpe insensible and attacks the bride. Kazan kills the assailant, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader, takes a young mate, Gray Wolf, and a few nights later drives off the pack which had attacked Pierre, a sick man, his daughter Joan, and her baby. Then, held by Joan's kindness, Kazan stays with her. Pierre dies. Joan and Kazan start with the sledge to the settlement and Joan falls exhausted. The dog saves her and the baby, and with Gray Wolf, establishes a lair near Joan's home.

"Good old Kazan," she cried softly, putting her face down close to him. "We're glad you came, Kazan, for we're going to be alone tonight—baby and I. Daddy's gone to the post, and you must care for us while he's away." She tickled his nose with the end of her long shining braid. This always delighted the baby, for in spite of his stoicism Kazan had to sniff and sometimes to sneeze, and twig his ears. And it pleased him, too. He loved the sweet scent of Joan's hair.

"And you'd fight for us, if you had to, wouldn't you?" she went on. Then she rose quietly. "I must close the door," she said. "I don't want you to go away again today, Kazan. You must stay with us."

Kazan went off to his corner, and lay down. Just as there had been some strange thing at the top of the Sun Rock to disturb him that day, so now there was a mystery that disturbed him in the cabin. He sniffed the air, trying to fathom its secret. Whatever it was, it seemed to make his mistress different, too. And she was digging out all sorts of odds and ends of things about the cabin, and doing them up in packages. Late that night, before she went to bed, Joan came and snuggled her hand close down beside him for a few moments.

"We're going away," she whispered, and there was a curious tremble that was almost a sob in her voice. "We're going home, Kazan. We're going away down where his people live—where they have churches, and cities, and music, and all the beautiful things in the world. And we're going to take you, Kazan!"

Kazan didn't understand. But he was happy at having the woman so near to him, and talking to him. At these times he forgot Gray Wolf. The dog that was in him surged over his quarter-strain of wildness, and the woman and the baby alone filled his world. But after Joan had gone to her bed, and all was quiet in the cabin, his old uneasiness returned. He rose to his feet and moved stealthily about the cabin, sniffing at the walls, the door and the things his mistress had done into packages. A low whine rose in his throat. Joan, half asleep, heard it, and murmured:

"Be quiet, Kazan. Go to sleep—go to sleep—"

Long after that, Kazan stood rigid in the center of the room, listening, trembling. And faintly he heard, far away, the wailing cry of Gray Wolf. But tonight it was not the cry of loneliness. It sent a thrill through him. He ran to the door, and whined, but Joan was deep in slumber and did not hear him. Once more he heard the cry, and only once. Then the night grew still. He crouched down near the door.

Joan found him there, still watchful, still listening, when she awoke in the early morning. She came to open the door for him, and in a moment he was gone. His feet seemed scarcely to touch the earth as he sped in the direction of the Sun Rock. Across the plain he could see the cap of it already painted with a golden glow.

He came to the narrow winding trail, and wormed his way up it swiftly.

Gray Wolf was not at the top to greet him. But he could smell her, and the scent of that other thing was strong in the air. His muscles tightened; his legs grew tense. Deep down in his chest there began the low rumble of a growl. He knew now what that strange thing was that had haunted him, and made him uneasy. It was life. Something that lived and breathed had invaded the home which he and Gray Wolf had chosen. He bared his long fangs, and a snarl of defiance drew back his lips. Stiff-legged, prepared to spring, his neck and head reaching out, he approached the two rocks between which Gray Wolf had crept the night before. She was still there. And with her was something else. After a moment the tenseness left Kazan's body. His bristling crest dropped until it lay flat. His ears shot forward, and he put his head and shoulders between the two rocks, and whined softly. And Gray Wolf whined. Slowly Kazan backed out, and faced the rising sun. Then he lay down, so that his body shielded the entrance to the chamber between the rocks.

Gray Wolf was a mother.

CHAPTER XI.

The Tragedy on Sun Rock.

All that day Kazan guarded the top of the Sun Rock. Fate, and the fear and brutality of masters, had heretofore kept him from fatherhood, and he was puzzled. Something told him now that he belonged to the Sun Rock, and not to the cabin. The call that came to him from over the plain was not so strong. At dusk Gray Wolf came out from her retreat, and slunk to his side, whimpering, and nipped gently at his shaggy neck. It was the old instinct of his fathers that made him respond by caressing Gray Wolf's face with his tongue. Then Gray Wolf's jaws opened, and she laughed in short panting breaths, as if she had been hard run. She was happy, and as they heard a little snuffling sound from between the rocks, Kazan wagged his tail, and Gray Wolf darted back to her young.

The babyish cry and its effect upon Gray Wolf taught Kazan his first lesson in fatherhood. Instinct again told him that Gray Wolf could not go down to the hunt with him now—that she must stay at the top of the Sun Rock. So when the moon rose he went down alone, and toward dawn returned with a big white rabbit between his jaws. It was the wild in him that made him do this, and Gray Wolf ate ravenously. Then he knew that each night hereafter he must hunt for Gray Wolf—and the little whimpering creatures hidden between the two rocks.

The next day, and still the next, he did not go to the cabin, though he heard the voices of both the man and the woman calling him. On the fifth he went down, and Joan and the baby were so glad that the woman hugged him, and the baby kicked and laughed and screamed at him, while the man stood by cautiously, watching their demonstrations with a gleam of disapprobation in his eyes.

"I'm afraid of him," he told Joan for the hundredth time. "That's the wolf-gleam in his eyes. He's of a treacherous breed. Sometimes I wish we'd never brought him home."

"If we hadn't—where would the baby—have gone?" Joan reminded him, a little catch in her voice.

"I had almost forgotten that," said her husband. "Kazan, you old devil, I guess I love you, too." He laid his hand caressingly on Kazan's head. "Wonder how he'll take to life down there?" he asked. "He has always been used to the forests. It'll seem mighty strange."

"And so—have I—always been used to the forests," whispered Joan. "I guess that's why I love Kazan—next to you and the baby. Kazan—dear old Kazan!"

This time Kazan felt and scented more of that mysterious change in the cabin. Joan and her husband talked incessantly of their plans when they were together; and when the man was away Joan talked to the baby, and to him. And each time that he came down to the cabin during the week that followed, he grew more and more restless, until at last the man noticed the change in him.

"I believe he knows," he said to Joan one evening. "I believe he knows we're preparing to leave." Then he added: "The river was rising again today. It will be another week before we can start, perhaps longer."

That same night the moon flooded the top of the Sun Rock with a golden light, and out into the glow of it came Gray Wolf, with her three little whelps toddling behind her. There was much about these soft little balls that tumbled about him and snuggled in his tawny coat that reminded Kazan of the baby. At times they made the same queer, soft little sounds, and they staggered about on their four little legs just as helplessly as baby Joan made her way about on two. He did not fondle them, as Gray Wolf did, but the touch of them, and their babyish whimperings, filled him with a kind of pleasure that he had never experienced before.

The moon was straight above them, and the night was almost as bright as day, when he went down again to hunt for Gray Wolf. At the foot of the rock a big white rabbit popped up ahead of him, and he gave chase. For half a mile he pursued, until the wolf instinct in him rose over the dog, and he gave up the futile race. A deer he might have overtaken, but small game the wolf must hunt as the fox hunts it, and he began to slip through the thickets slowly and as quietly as a shadow. He was a mile from the Sun Rock when two quick leaps put Gray Wolf's supper between his jaws. He trotted back slowly, dropping the big seven-pound snow-shoe hare now and then to rest.

When he came to the narrow trail that led to the top of the Sun Rock he stopped. In that trail was the warm scent of strange feet. The rabbit fell from his jaws. Every hair in his body was suddenly electrified into life. What he scented was not the scent of a rabbit, a marten or a porcupine. Fang and claw had climbed the path ahead of him. And then, coming faintly to him from the top of the rock, he heard sounds which sent him up with a terrible whining cry. When he reached the summit he saw in the white moonlight a scene that stopped him for a single moment. Close to the edge of the sheer fall to the rocks, fifty feet below, Gray Wolf was engaged in a death-struggle with a huge gray lynx. She was down—and under, and from her there came a sudden sharp terrible cry of pain.

Kazan flew across the rock. His attack was the swift silent assault of the wolf, combined with the greater courage, the fury and the strategy of the husky. Another husky would have died in that first attack. But the lynx was not a dog or a wolf. It was "Mow-lee, the swift," as the Sarcees had named it—the quickest creature in the wilderness. Kazan's inch-long fangs should have sunk deep in its jugular. But in a fractional part of a second the lynx had thrown itself back like a huge soft ball, and Kazan's teeth buried themselves in the flesh of its neck instead of the jugular. And Kazan was not now fighting the fangs of a wolf in the pack, or of another husky. He was fighting claws—claws that ripped like twenty razor-edged knives, and which even a jugular hold could not stop.

Once he had fought a lynx in a trap, and he had not forgotten the lesson the battle had taught him. He fought to pull the lynx down, instead of forcing it on its back, as he would have done with another dog or a wolf. He knew that when on its back the fierce cat was most dangerous. One rip of its powerful hind feet could disembowel him.

Behind him he heard Gray Wolf sobbing and crying, and he knew that she was terribly hurt. He was filled with the rage and strength of two dogs, and his teeth met through the flesh and hide of the cat's throat. But the big lynx escaped death by half an inch. It would take a fresh grip to reach the jugular, and suddenly Kazan made the deadly lunge. There was an instant's freedom for the lynx, and in that moment it flung itself back, and Kazan gripped at its throat—on top.

The cat's claws ripped through his flesh, cutting open his side—a little too high to kill. Another stroke and they would have cut to his vitals. But they had struggled close to the edge of the rock wall, and suddenly, without a snarl or a cry, they rolled over. It was fifty or sixty feet to the rocks of the ledge below, and even as they pitched over and over in the fall, Kazan's teeth sank deeper. They struck with terrific force, Kazan uppermost. The shock sent him half a dozen feet from his enemy. He was up like a flash, dizzy, snarling, on the defensive. The lynx lay limp and motionless where it had fallen. Kazan came nearer, still prepared, and sniffed cautiously. Something told him that the fight was over. He turned and dragged himself slowly along the ledge to the trail, and returned to Gray Wolf.

The fight with the lynx necessitates a complete change in the course of life for Kazan and Gray Wolf—as described in the next installment.

Carrier Pigeons in Warfare.

The value of airplanes in the war is partly due to the speed of the carrier pigeons taken aloft and released with messages. Should the airplane be shot down the bird may accomplish the task the man set out to do. In the French army alone it is said upward of 15,000 carrier pigeons are used daily.

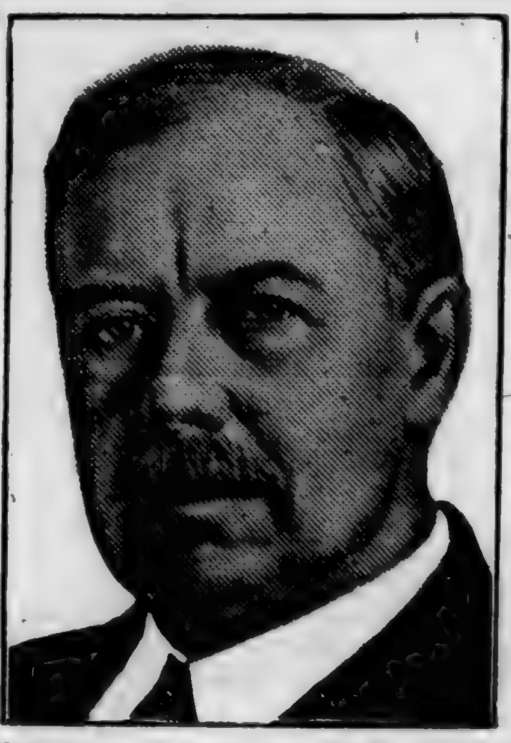
SUSTAINS REPUTATION AS HUSTLER



If the following is not the record for quick action, it certainly is a notable performance. A few days ago Mr. Howard H. Gross of Chicago, who is carrying on with great success the campaign for universal military training, took a day off to help agriculture.

While in Washington, a prominent official asked him if it was not possible in some way to get help to the farmers immediately to assist in planting and cultivating the spring crops.

Within 24 hours after reaching home Mr. Gross put his plan in operation. He secured from the board of education an order releasing nearly 6,000 high school boys and permitting them to substitute in place of their regular school duties work upon the farms, for which they will be given full credit.

The boys were enthusiastic and nearly 1,600 of them registered the first day. It took two hours to get this action by the board of education. Before the day closed several thousand dollars had been subscribed toward expenses, and he had arranged with Rotary clubs throughout the country to co-operate in a campaign to secure the release of other boys in the respective cities where these organizations are located and help to bring the boys and the farmers together.

A dozen of our larger cities have already adopted the Chicago plan, and the probabilities are that 20,000 or more boys will be given farm work in substitution for school work. This is surely a big job to put over between sunrise and sunset.

HEAD OF GENERAL NAVY BOARD

© G. V. BUCK

"What has come to him, he has won by hard work always."

This is what the navy department thinks of Admiral William Shepherd Benson, chief of naval operations, president of the general board of the navy and the one man, above all others, upon whom rests the success or failure of the fleet.

When congress recently wrote into the law that Admiral Benson's orders "were to be considered as emanating from the secretary of the navy and have full force and effect as such," it showed what it thought of him.

The chief of operations is truly a Southern gentleman. He was born on a small plantation in the heart of Georgia in 1855, and has carried with him throughout his brilliant career the best traditions of the old South.

Tall, spare, with a most courtly bearing and a full, white mustache, much like his predecessor, Admiral Dewey, the admiral presents the most distinguished appearance. His rise has been meteoric during the last few years.

His first cruise as captain of a battleship was in 1913, when he piloted the Utah to the fleet pennant. He then assumed command of the Philadelphia navy yard, where he did "his bit" with such "great labor and excellence" as to be called to Washington in 1915 when a man was sought to create and take charge of the now vital office of naval operations.

ADMIRAL TELLS OF CITIES' PERILS

The peril that threatens New York city because the United States lacks adequate aerial defense is a peril that will soon theaten every inland city in America, said Admiral Peary in a recent interview. Chicago, for instance, with its wealth and importance as a transportation and manufacturing center, will soon be scarcely more secure from enemy attack by air than New York, Washington or any other of our coast cities.

At the present time foreign powers, probably six, have the men, the machines, the experience and the expert knowledge that would enable them by issuing an order today to destroy New York city or Washington or any other of our great coastal cities from the air in a single night two weeks from now.

In the very near future in a few hours more they could shower death and destruction upon any one of our inland centers, such as Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, St. Louis, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Kansas City and even far-off Denver.

The United States has neither airplanes nor dirigibles nor aviators nor anti-aircraft guns nor any other means of preventing such destruction.

Uncle Hez Sez:

Ef them St. Joe lights continy at thar present brilyunt perfection, "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star" 'ill become so pop'lar hyerabouts it'll hev to be set to music.

A man may resk his life climbin' the Alps 'r some o' them high mountains an' then fall off'n a log when crossin' a stream an' git drownded. He a-showed more sense ef he'd a-stayed to hum an' larnt tew swim.

The ten commandments er busted ev'ry second. That ain't no fault o' the ten commandments—they're all right. The fault lays with the feller who does the bustin'.

The other day, I seen a man cavortin' eround an' turnin' summersets in the air in one o' them aryplanes. The crowd hollered their-se'fs hoarse an' come mighty nigh unjintin' thar necks rubberin'; but if the feller'd a-fell an' broke his neck, he'd a-been too dead t' hear how many diff'rent kind o' fools them same folks 'ud a-called him. Pop'larity is mostly havin' the fool luck t' not fall an' break yer neck.

The man who won't pay what he owes pays a higher rate o' int'rest then the honest feller.

A man can't add an inch to his height by gittin' on a pair o' stilts. He kin see a little furder, but he falls furder if he stubs his toe.

The feller what hoorays erbout Ole Glory an' tosses up his hat is all right, but I'm fer the feller who keeps his mouth shet an' shoulders a gun.

Erbout a quarter o' the patriots kick on bein' privuts an' want t' be put on the officers' reserve list. Sich patriots ain't got the makin' o' even a poor privut in 'em. If them fellers git what they want, gin'rals 'll be thicker after the war then "ku'nels" an' "majahs" is in Missoury.

Thar's women folks who'd be scart fer fear some 'un 'ud see thar ankles when crossin' a muddy street who'd put on a bathin' suit an' parade up an' down a beach fer hours—ef they hev good forms—an' nev-think o' blushin'. Queer, ain't it?

The man who prays an' does the best he kin, kin trust the Lord t' give him a squar deal.

The gov'ment is goin' t' commander all idlers an' set them t' work. Why not begin on them females that spend the summer at Newport an sich swell places, believe in birth control an' can't find nothing better to love then a poodle dawg? An' while they're at it, why not cut down the high cost o' livin' an' take away the poodle's appertite by mixin' pizen with his grub?

FACTS ABOUT THE HUMMING BIRD

Hummer, the hummingbird! Who has not seen this little winged marvel and not admitted him as a living gem? Hummer is in the truest sense an American. He is found nowhere save in the Americas. In all there are about five hundred species of hummingbirds, only seventeen of which are found in the United States, and of these only eight come north of the border states and only one east of Mississippi river. The latter is the best known of all and is called the Ruby-throat because of the exquisite and brilliant ruby colored throat of the male.

Hummer is the smallest of all our birds, so tiny that it appear almost like an insect. Yet he is a perfect little bird, and in some respects the most wonderful of all the feathered folk. Just think of such a mite of a creature making the long Journey from Labrador to far away Central America! Hummer does it. No other bird can move its wings with anything like the speed that this Hummer moves his. So fast do they move that your eyes can see only a blur and cannot distinguish the wings at all. And it is the same great speed which causes them to make the humming which gives the little bird his name. He has no song, his voice being a mouse-like squeak. But what he lacks in this respect he more than makes up for in the beauty of its coat.

As you all know, Hummer is a great lover of flowers, espically the sweet tubular flowers like trumpet-vine and the honeysuckle. A great many people suppose that he lives wholly upon the sweet juices of the flowers, but this is a mistake. Attempts to feed captive hummingbirds on syrup alone have resulted in starvation for the little fellows. They eat tiny insects in great numbers, many of which they catch in the heart of the flowers. He has the wonderful ability to keep in one posittion in midair while he probes the heart of a flower with his long bill and tongue, nd can actually move backwards a bit.

His nest is as dainty as the builder, a tiny cup of soft plant down covered with lichens until it looks like a mossy knot on the branch to which it is fastened. There are but two eggs, the size of peas and pure white. The young stay in the nest about three weeks. They are the size of honey-bees when hatched, and the bills at that time are short. They are fed much as pigeons feed their young. The food is partly digested in the crop of the parent, the bill of the latter thrust down the throat of the baby and the food pumped into it.—Thornton W. Burgess, in "The Green Mountain Club," in The People's Home Journal, for June.

Farmers' Meeting

A meeting of farmers will be held at the Carr school house, 2 miles west of St. Joe, on Thursday evening of this week. County Agent A. Z. Arehart will be present and make an address. Them Lights Is "Bum"

The blind leadeth the blind and neither falleth into the ditch.—Slams iii, 1.

'Twas night. A man might have been seen (and would have been seen in any other town but St. Joe) slowly groping his way along the sidewalk. There was no secrecy about his movements: he was no prowler bent on crime—just a staid, sober citizen endeavoring to locate his own home among the shadows that bordered on his pathway. He wished—yea, fervently and irreverently yearned—to be seen; for then he, in turn, could see. Hence, the expression "could have been seen" makes it plain that the electric lights were on—

Somewhere else besides in St. Joe!

The man was busy—busy trying to avoid collecting the face of a life insurance policy and to avoid losing his temper, in the last of which he failed utterly. He was very precise about his method of procedure: he never took a step in advance until he had calculated to a certainty the location of the next post or tree; and then went forward only to find that it had shifted position and was about three rods from where it should have been. As a discoverer, he had Columbus outclassed—he discovered posts enough to line Broadway, New York, and ditches enough to change the course of the Mississippi river; and to each discovery he applied a name, a name more expressive than elegant. He elevated great patches of hide big bunches on his shins and head, but didn't elevate his frame of mind. He took an inventory of his worldly possessions in the form of exterior bones and marked the position of each one with a black and blue spot; and he was surprised to find out how rich he was in bony substance. He would have made an affidavit that he had more ribs than a battleship and more shins than a mammoth thousand-legged worm.

"Well, I vum!" There's nothing bad about that, so we give his exact language.

The man stopped and listened. He cocked his head to one side and turned half around to make sure he was not mistaken. Then he repeated his former exclamation:

"Well, I vum!"

Coming down the street behind the man was another man. Strange to relate, the new comer was moving at a fair pace and keeping the middle of the walk with perfect ease; and, stranger to relate, he was cheerily singing "I'm Happy on the Way."

"Hello, stranger!"

The St. Joe man thus accosted the person that had overtaken him. He used the word "stranger" because that is a common form of address after dark, when no man has any definite outlines and features are a conglomeration of blur. The new comer was a stranger, all right, as his voice clearly proved.

"Hullo!" was the prompt answer, pleasantly spoken.

"You seem jolly enough," growled the St. Joeite. If he had expressed what he thought, he would have added: "The man who can sing on these streets at night ought to have a place in history along with Job."

"Jolly? Why shouldn't I be?" queried the stranger. Then he continued: "I'm out for a little stroll—communing with nature."

"Nature, eh?" cut in the irate St. Joe man. "How'd you do it? Chop your way through the darkness? Lend me your ax."

"I haven't any ax," was the quiet reply—"only this small cane."

"Only this small cane, eh," roared the Hoosier. "No cane for mine. If I have to travel these streets much after dark, I'll cut down the high price of livin' by startin' a crutch factory for my own use."

"Well, well, well! Queer, queer, queer!" exclaimed the stranger. "Here you are, railing at your town, and I think it one of the most delightful little burgs I was ever in. None better for a stroll—nice level sidewalks everywhere. Why, man, you ought to be proud of St. Joe."

"So I am," stoutly declared the St. Joe man, loyalty to home overcoming his anger; and then, as if fearing he had admitted too much, he quickly added, "in day time."

"Come, let me lead you."

The stranger took the St. Joe man by the arm, and the two started along the sidewalk together. They got along so well that the latter soon found himself becoming good company. He said:

"Say, you seem to see by night."

"Just as well as by day," was the reply.

"Is that so? You're lucky."

"No, I'm blind."

"The blind leadeth the blind," said the St. Joe man.

"And neither falleth into the ditch," added the blind man.

Three Young Men Enlist

Three young men—Gray Woodcox and Roy Haifley, of St. Joe; and Merwin Place, of Coburntown—have attested in the hiphest degree to their loyalty by offering their services to Uncle Sam. All of them may not pass the extmination that admits to the army; but whatever the result be, they can not be numbered among the slackers. They are three manly young men who can illy be spared from this community and none of whom will disgrace the flag he fights for. The first is the son of C. A. Woodcox; the second, of Joseph B. Haifley and wife; the third, of R. F. Place and wife, of Spencer township.

WHAT WILL PEOPLE SAY?

BY H. C. CHURCHMAN

A TIMELY, UP-TO-DATE POEM

He lived above his income in a stylish part of town,
He'd suffered some reverses and expenses cut him down.
His better judgment counselled him 'twere wise to move away.
The only thing deterring him was
"What will people say?"

He owned an automobile, which he kept at some expense,
He purchased all the trimmings and, indeed, it was immense.
He stood off many creditors—the ones he couldn't pay.
He thought: "I should dispose of it, but
'What will people say?'"

Now, many stylish functions, fitted to their style of life,
Were managed by his daughters and his most devoted wife.
He told them it was troublesome when came the time to pay.
They answered: "Discontinue them? Why,
'What would people say?'"

At last, by debts he found himself beset on every side;
And so he bought a "forty-eight" and slipped away and died.
A grand and stylish funeral he had when laid away:
They did not dare to save expense, for
"What would people say?"

Every citizen of this community is urged to come and help make the occasion one of patriotic inspiration, especially at this time, when war clouds hovering over us.
are

The Call to The Plow

While patriotism now runs high, the time is opportune to try to do our best to feed the world, with freedom's banner still unfurled. We'll not permit autocracy that ruled so long in Germany, to trample on our sacred right though we might have the world to fight!

Our patriot farmers will now depend on a good corn dodger now and then, for old DeKalb county won't have wheat eno'gh for seed an' bread to eat. Since hogs are scarce and pork is high, we'll eat more fruit and pumpkin pie; depend on garden truck and beans and occassionally a mess of greens.

We've got good soil and tools and teams, and we'll grow big crops of corn and beans; the farmer has always done his share on the fields of peace or the fields of war. Tobacco growers, it is said, will grow tomatoes in its stead, for there are many things our soldiers need much more than this harmful, filthy weed.

It seems to me that the time has come to cut out useless things like rum, and have more needful things to use in the place of cigerettes and booze. If all the millions that the wets are spending for booze and cigarettes would all be spent for meat and bread the hungry poor might be well fed. Then let's go to work, with our might and main and no duty shirk till our old world's free again.

Ideas On Etiquette

Table etiquette is that which permits a man to handle his soup in company without being placed under a peace bond, and he should not eat his ice cream with a fish fork, or dip his knife in the molasses so the peas won't fall off.

The only place one can be sure of finding table etiquette is in the dictionary, though a fairly good imitation is seen at old maids' five o'clock teas. It consists of more rules and regulations than Mathuselah, Seth, and Enos could have used if they had never done anything but eat, running anywhere from who should have the gizzard to the best antidote for hot gravy on your trousers. Eggs should be opened in the cellar and then served.

Rules of etiquette will not apply to all men because some have lost their appetites, and in a number of cases seem to have found a hog's. There has been some discussion for a number of years among epicurians on the subjects of just how close to a man's nose may one hurl a biscuit without violating conventional etiquette, though it is generally considered a breach to hit that organ with one that weighs more than fourteen ounces. There is nothin in the book of rules that applies to prunes and hash, because a man who can manage these two articles in any manner whatsoever is either a billy goat or orstrict, neither of which are held responsible.

In the olden days only two regulations were required: one must wear a glove so that the fingers would not get burned in the scramble, and the biggest man got the choice piece. The fork at that time had four prongs and a thumb, but now the time has changed, and so many instruments are spread about the plate that one can't tell whether it is an operating table in a hospital or an automobile repair shop.

Twenty-seven knives, forks, and spoons are used in eating one small potatoe, two olives and a demi-taste and a man who lifts the wrong eyebrow at the right time is tabooed from society as a crude, gross, savage, that is, if he is not rich, but a millionaire may eat raw onions with a shovel for breakfast and still be cosidered the most polished clubman in "our set".

ALLEN COUNTY FARMER KILLED BY LIGHTNING

While at work rolling a freshly plowed field, Louis Urbine, an Allen county farmer, was struck by lightning at 6 o'clock Friday night during a heavy thunder and electrical storm and instantly killed. Following a loud clap of thunder and a sudden flash of lightning, Urbine was seen to fall and his team ran away. The deceased leaves a widow and four children.

If you watch the world rather closely and study it all the time you might be able to know something about it in the next five years or so.

Hoch Zum Kaiser

The following poem, recited by Capt. Bob Evans at a banquet given in honor of Admiral Dewey shortly after the Spanish-American war, called forth a protest at that time. It went the round of the press, and is of more interest now than it was then. The poem is entitled "Meinself und Gott."

Der Kaiser of die Vaterland
Und Gott on high all things command—
Ve two. Ach! don't you understand?
Meinself—und Gott!

Vhile some men sing der Power Divine,
Mine soldiers sing "Die Wacht am Rhine"
Und drink der health in Rhenish wine
Of Me—und Gott!

Der's France, she swaggers all aroundt.
She's ausgespielt—of no accoundt,
To much we dink she don't amoundt,

They Must Have Lights

A law passed by the last legistature provides that every vehicle, except one drawn or pushed by hand, shall carry light, both in front and rear from sunset to one hour before sunrise. It will mean that drivers of horse drawn vehicles will be compelled in the future to be equipped much in the same manner as an automobil and is in the promotion of safety in avoiding accidents. The only kind of horsedrawn vehicle that is excluded in this law is one designed for the transportion of hay and straw while loaded with such commodities. It is provided that the lights shall be of such strength that they will be visible 300 feet from the front and 200 feet from the rear.

U. S. TROOPS TO GO TO FRANCE; DRAFT SIGNED

Major General Pershing Directed by President to Command Division in France.

BARS T. R. VOLUNTEER ARMY

Executive Sets June 5 as the Date of Registration for Men Between Ages of 21 and 31—National Guard to Be Mobilized in August.

Washington, May 21.—President Wilson signed the conscription bill after rejecting that section of the measure which would permit Col. Theodore Roosevelt to organize volunteer divisions.

The president signed the army bill just after dinner at 8 p. m. on Friday, without formality, and set June 5 as the date of registration for all men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-one for military service.

President Issues Proclamation.

President Wilson's proclamation, putting into effect the selective draft provision of the war army bill, signed last night, follows in part:

"A proclamation by the president of the United States:

"Whereas, Congress has enacted and the president has on the 18th day of May, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, approved a law which contains the following provisions:

"Section 5. That all male persons between the ages of Twenty-one and thirty, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the president; and upon proclamation by the president or other public notice given by him or by his direction, stating the time and place of such registration, it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages, except officers and enlisted men of the regular army, the navy and the National Guard and naval militia while in the service of the United States, to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act, and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of said proclamation or other notice as aforesaid given by the president or by his direction: and any person who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year, and shall thereupon be duly registered; provided, that in the call of the docket precedence shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceedings under this act: Provided further, that persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their twenty-first birthday and who shall not have attained their thirty-first birthday on or before the day set for registration, and all persons so registered shall be and remain subject to draft into the forces hereby authorized, unless exempted or excused therefrom as in this act provided.

Registration on June 5.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States, do call upon the governor of each of the several states and territories, the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia and all officers and agents of the several states and territories, of the District of Columbia and of the counties and municipalities therein to perform certain duties in the execution of the foregoing law, which duties will be communicated to them directly in regulations of even date herewith.

"And I do further proclaim and give notice to all persons subject to registration in the several states and in the District of Columbia in accordance with the above law that the time and place of such registration shall be between 7 a. m. and 9 p. m. on the fifth day of June, 1917, at the registration place in the precinct wherein they have their permanent homes. Those who shall have attained their twenty-first birthday and who shall not have attained their thirty-first birthday on or before the day here named are required to register, excepting only officers and enlisted men of the regular army, the navy, the marine corps and the National Guard and Naval Militia while in the service of the United States, and officers in the officers' reserve corps and enlisted men in the enlisted reserve corps while in active service. In the territories of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico a day for registration will be named in a later proclamation.

All Must Co-operate.

"The power against which we are arrayed has sought to impose its will upon the world by force. To this end it has increased armament until it has changed the face of war. In the sense in which we have been wont to think of armies there are no armies in this struggle. There are entire nations armed. Thus, the men who remain to till the soil and man the factories are no less a part of the army that is in France than the men beneath the battle flags. It must be so with us. It is not an army that we must shape and train for war; it is a nation. To this end our people must draw close in one compact front against a common foe. But this cannot be if each man pursues a private purpose. All must pursue one purpose.

"The nation needs all men, but it needs each man, not in the field that will most pleasure him, but in the endeavor that will best serve the common good.

"It is in no sense a conscription of the unwilling — it is rather selection from a nation which has volunteered in mass.

"The day here named is the time upon which all shall present themselves for assignment to their tasks.

"It is essential that the day be approached in thoughtful apprehension of its significance and that we accord to it the honor and the meaning that it deserves. Our industrial need prescribes that it be not made a technical holiday, but the stern sacrifice that is before us urges that it be carried in all our hearts as a great day of patriotic devotion and obligation when the duty shall lie upon every man, whether he is himself to be registered or not, to see to it that the name of every male person of the designated ages is written on these lists of honor.

"By the president:

"ROBERT LANSING,
"Secretary of State."

Division Ordered to France.

President Wilson directed that an expeditionary force of approximately a division of regular troops, under command of Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing, proceed to France at as early a date as practicable. General Pershing and staff will precede the troops.

A division contains approximately 28,000 men. It is understood that at least 20,000 will be infantry.

The war bill was carefully gone over during the day by Brigadier General Crowder, judge advocate general and provost marshal general.

It was announced that all existing regiments of the guard will be called into service by August 5, and officials estimate that with from a month to six weeks' intensive training these troops will be ready to go forward for final preparation behind the fighting lines in Europe for the fighting that is before them.

President's Statement.

The president issued the following statement at the White House:

"I shall not avail myself, at any rate, at the present stage of the war, of the authorization conferred by the act to organize volunteer divisions.

"To do so would seriously interfere with the carrying out of the chief and most immediately important purpose contemplated by this legislation:

"The prompt creation and early use of an effective army would contribute practically nothing to the effective strength of the armies now engaged against Germany.

"No Time for Compliments."

"I understand that the section of this act which authorizes the creation of volunteer divisions in addition to the draft was added with a view to providing an independent command for Mr. Roosevelt and giving the military authorities an opportunity to use his fine vigor and enthusiasm recruiting the forces now at the western front.

"It would be very agreeable to me to pay Mr. Roosevelt this compliment and the allies the compliment of sending to their aid one of our most distinguished public men, an ex-president, who has rendered many conspicuous public services and proved his gallantry in many striking ways.

Seeks Advice From Both Sides.

"The business now in hand is undramatic, practical and of scientific definiteness and precision.

"I shall act with regard to it at every step and in every particular under expert and professional advice, from both sides of the water.

"The first troops sent to France will be taken from the present force of the regular army and will be under the command of trained soldiers only.

"The issues involved are too immense for me to take into consideration anything whatever except the best, most effective, most immediate means of military action. What these means are I know from the mouths of men who have seen war as it is conducted, who have no illusions and to whom the whole grim matter is a matter of business. I shall center my attention upon those matters and let everything else wait. I should be deeply to blame should I do otherwise, whatever the argument of policy or of personal gratification of advantage."

Rosebud Sachet.

An unusual sachet which would be very attractive for the hat-box or to keep among lingerie, is a tiny bunch of rosebuds, such as are used for decorating boudoir caps, negligees, etc.

The heart of each rose, before being coiled should be filled with one's favorite sachet. In a cluster of eight or nine roses, the sachet will be large enough to impart a delicate fragrance.

A sachet of this sort is extremely dainty and the rosebuds the most easily manipulated of all the ribbon flowers. The ribbon should be an inch wide and sewed into a little pocket at one end of the sachet, then wrapped around and around until it is the correct size. A few leaves, cut out of green velvet, will be an attractive contrast.

KAISER PLANS WORLD EMPIRE

GERMANY'S PEACE MANUVERS INDICATE WAR MOVES.

RESTING PERIOD BY TRUCE

Germany Would Form Consolidated Military Unit Stretching From the North Sea to the Mediterranean.

Washington, May 21.—Germany's next peace declaration, expected to suggest a program of territorial renunciation on the east and the west, is regarded here as largely answered beforehand by information revealing for the first time the full scope of the imperial government's aspirations for conquest in the south.

This information discloses as one of the primary aims of the war a plan for consolidation of an impregnable military and economic unit stretching from the North sea to the Mediterranean, cutting Europe permanently in half, controlling the Dardanelles, the Aegean and the Baltic and eventually forming the backbone of a Prussian world empire.

In the light of German history, the plan shows how implicitly the kaiser has followed out the blood and iron politico-economic methors of Bismarck for development for Prussian power. Considered in view of the present war map, it shows that the major portion of the kaiser's war program has been accomplished, regardless of what disposition is made of conquered territory in France, Belgium and Russia.

A full realization of this situation, which will form a sinister background for consideration for whatever renunciation poposals the chancellor may make, adds a new force to the repeated declarations of allied statesmen that the German peace maneuvers are in reality war moves, and that a premature truce only would give Germany a resting period in which to further Prussianize and prepare for a greater world war the territory to the southeast, which she has conquered under the guise of a friendly alliance.

World Must Be Democratized.

Although officials have refrained from definite public expression of what the United States might demand as a peace guarantee, these possibilities recall with recurring emphasis President Wilson's decleration that America might fight until "the world is made safe for democracy." They bring into relief Foreign Minister Balfour's warning that hard fighting still must win the war, the conviction of the American army general staff that the country must prepare for at least three years of war, and the fact that predictions of an early peace have been discredited as visionary in virtually every allied capital.

How minutely defined is the German plan and how accurately it is being carried out has become fully apparent only with the opening up, during the last few weeks of several new avenues of information. The return of American diplomatic agents from the central empires, the visit of the British and French war missions, detailed confidential reports of the recent frank expressions in the reichstag and in the German press, and the deductions of alert American agents abroad watching the newest peace moves have supplied the explanation of more than one hitherto obscured feature of the German policy.

Activities of Pan-German League.

In her southeastern conquests, it is now apparent, Germany has followed almost into the long-established plan of the Pan-German league, whose propogonda had been regarded outside of Germany as the harmless activity of extremists, too radical to be taken seriously. Coupled with this plan, as an instrument of economic consolidation, the German officials have used with only slight modifications the system of customs union expansion which aided Prussia in former years to extend her domination over the other German states now making up the empire.

As early as 1911 the Pan-German league is said to have circulated a definite propaganda of conquest, with printed appeals containing maps of a greater Germany whose salients from Hamburg of Constantinople and thence southeastward through Asiatic Turkey was marked out by boundaries virtually concident with the military lines held to-day, under German officers, by the troops of Germany, Austro-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey. Adhesion of the German government itself to to such a plan was not suspected by the other powers although the propagandists were permitted to continue their activities unhindered and to spread their appeals in a country of strict press supervision through the Pan-German Gazette and other radical publications. How closely the German government did adhere to the plan in reality has been demonstrated clearly, it is considered now by the course of the war.

Dream of Great Germany.

Following in the footsteps of Bismarck, who used the Franco-Prussian war alliance to bring Baden, Bavaria and Wurtemburg into the German confederacy and then into the German empire, Emperor William chose was as the means of establishing the broad pathway to the southeast which was essential for realization of the dream of a great Germany.

The subjugation of Austria-Hungary, which would have presented a difficult task under ordinary conditions, became, in these circumstances, comparatively simple. A polyglot combination of states having little in common and apparently held together only by the decaying genius of the aged emperor, Frances Joseph, the dual monarchy was regarded everywhere as on the verge of dissolution. Her helplessness before Russia's armies became apparent early in the war, and the eagerness with which Germany seized the opportunity thus presented is pointed to as emphasizing the farsightedness of the German plans.

Germany's Peace Terms?

It is problematical to officials here how far Germany might go, should peace be made with renunciation of all territory on the east and west, in political consolidation of the great territory in the southeast. It is pointed out that any German peace offer would be expected to demand at least some expansion of Bulgaria, and retention of enough of the conquered Balkan territory to insure the route to Constantinople. That it is the intention to bring Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey into a customs union, Germanizing their industries, and to surround the whole economic entity thus established with a formidable tariff wall has been made clear by the decelarations of Frederich Nieumann and other exponents of an economic mittel Europa.

Some influential men of this group even have suggested that Germany go as far immediately as to establish a joint chancellory for Germany, Austria and Hungary to conduct their affairs.

All this is taken as revealing the perilous premature peace should the German southeastern domain be unbroken. It is regarded as giving a sinister color to recent movements for a separate peace for Austria-Hungary or Bulgaria in the region where German conquest is most safe; to the eagerness with which German leaders have taken up the cry of "no annexations" so far as the great northern powers are concerned; to the German chancellor's recent reichstag speech indicating that the government was not yet ready to renounce its territorial gains in France, Belgium and Russia, "while all other matters are left in suspense." Any renunciation of territory, it is expected, would exclude Poland, which would be made a "free" state under the German plan, but would remain wholly under German domination.

They Must Be Liberated.

The turn of affairs is accepted too, as bringing Austro-Hungary more clearly into relief as the area of possible operations to impose a barrier between Berlin and Constantinople. In that connection is recalled the declaration of the allies, replying to President Wilson's note in the light of knowledge which only now has become available here, that the war must accomplish "the liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Rumanians and of Tzecho-Slovacs from foreign dominations; the enfranchisement of populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turk; the expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman empire" and the restoration of Serbia, Montenegro and Rumania.

Such a program, it is pointed out, would effectually break up the greater Germany now established as the nucleus of a world Germany. It would impose a Rumanian-Serbian barrier between Austria and Bulgaria; would further enlarge this barrier by restoring to Rumania her 3,500,000 nationals in eastern Hungary and probably to Serbia 5,500,000 Serbo-Croatans in southern Austria and a large section of Bulgaria; would establish at the crucial southern point of the dual empire a free nation of seven million Tzecho-Slovacs and in the north a free Poland by the addition of five million Poles now under Austrian rule; would restore one million Italians to Italy and upward of 2,000,000 Slavs to Russia; and in addition would dismember the then detached Turkish territory to the south by liberating the Armenians and Syrians and removing the Dardanelles from German domination.

Have Struggle Before Us.

American officials have made it clear that in co-operating with the allies the United States was not entering a blinding alliance to accomplish definite and detailed territorial aims; but there is every evidence that the government understands in concrete form the crucial southeastern element of the situation and realizes the enormity of the struggle that must be won before the world is made "safe for democracy."

MEDICS OF U. OF I. TO GET NEW HOME

Consideration of Plans for Erecting Wing of Structure During the Summer.

PROBABLE SITE SELECTED

Governor Goodrich Giving Hearty Support to the University Heads for Providing the Much-Needed Building.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich, President William Lowe Bryan of Indiana university, the board of trustees of the institution and alumni and friends of the state university have taken steps to insure the erection of a new building for the Indiana university school of medicine and at least one wing of the building will be completed during the coming summer, on a site that may be near the Robert W. Long hospital, according to officials of the school.

Two plans have been under survey by friends of the institution, including the governor, since the situation arose in the 1917 legislature, which compelled the governor to refuse to approve the law that was passed at that time, appropriating $350,000 for the building of a new school, officials of the university said. One of these plans involved the purchase by the state of the present medical school building, at Market street and Senate avenue, for probably $150,000. This sum, used by the trustees of Indiana university, probably would allow the building of one wing of the proposed school building, and additional wings then could be financed from the regular taxation funds of the institution afterward.

Second Plan.

The second plan would involve the financing of the institution by alumni and its friends, and the governor has signified his willingness to become one of a group of ten or more such men, who would advance money for the construction of the proposed new school, Indiana university later to pay back the money from its regular taxation revenues.

William Lowe Bryan, president of Indiana university, expressed deep appreciation and gratitude to Governor Goodrich not only for his planning to have the state buy the old medical school building, but for his proposal to become one of a group of public-spirited men to finance the new school, if it were found impossible finally to work out the details by the other method.

May Be Affected by War.

Conditions of the state's treasury at the present time would seem to prevent the purchase of the old school building, it is reported, and the exigencies of the present war situation may work to hinder this plan of erecting the institution. The special emergency contingent fund for the institutions of the state, appropriated by the last legislature, to be expended by a special board including the governor and members of the legislature, would not take care of the medical school building and other possible channels into which the money may need to go. For that reason it may be that the plan to have a group of citizens finance the new school may be decided on.

The institution probably will be built at much cheaper cost than is usual, because of the possibility that the new brick plant that is to be operated at the Indiana state farm at Putnamville, may be able to turn out brick cheaply for the new institution.

Postal Clerks to Drill.

Instruction in the elements of military drill will be given to the post office clerks and other civil service employees in the city, according to plans made at the regular monthly meeting of Local No. 130, National Federation of Post Office Clerks. The meeting was held in the Hotel English, and was presided over by the president, Robert F. Cordrey.

Resolutions adopted declare that "citizens generally should be liable to military service in case they are needed to protect their country and its rights; that capital should also be subject to conscription for the general good at such times as the present, and that the president should be given power to regulate prices of necessities of life during the period of war."

A committee, comprised of John J. Lynch, chairman; C. E. Jones and V. Salisbury, was named to arrange for the drilling. Former army officers have promised to give the instruction. Not more than one hour a week will be devoted to the drilling at first. It is expected that a company of 100 can be organized to begin with.

To Have Separate Boards.

Governor Goodrich has just received a letter from the provost marshal general of the war department at Washington, stating that East Chicago and Gary, under the census bureau of the classification of cities for 1917, have reached approximately the 80,000 population requirements of the federal government for separate conscription boards. In view of this fact, the governor it is reported is definitely planning to authorise the appointment of separate conscription boards for these two cities.

Y. M. C. A. Organize Campaign.

The executive committee of the Young Men's Christian association's war work has divided Indiana into nine districts and apportioned to each the amount it is expected to contribute to the $150,000 gift of the people of this state to the national fund of $3,000,000 for association work in training camps, with troops in field service, and at the front, as well as among the men in the navy. The counties forming the districts and the apportionments follow:

District 1—Lake, Porter, Newton and Jasper, $17,400.

District 2—St. Joseph, Elkhart, Lagrange, Starke, Marshall, Kosciusko, Noble, Pulaski and Fulton, $13,700.

District 3—Steuben, Dekalb, Whitley, Allen, Huntington, Wells and Adams, $10,600.

District 4—Benton, White, Cass, Miami, Wabash, Warren, Tippecanoe, Carroll, Howard, Grant, Fountain, Montgomery, Boone and Clinton, $20,600.

District 5—Tipton, Madison, Delaware, Blackford, Jay, Randolph, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry, Wayne, Union, Fayette, Rush, Shelby and Johnson, $19,900.

District 6—Marion county only, $37,500.

District 7 — Hendricks, Putnam, Parke, Vermillion, Vigo, Clay, Morgan, Owen, Brown, Monroe, Greene and Sullivan, $12,500.

District 8—Knox, Daviess, Martin, Dubois, Pike, Gibson, Posey, Warrick, Perry, Spencer and Vanderburg, $9,000.

District 9—Franklin, Decatur, Bartholomew, Dearborn, Ripley, Jennings, Jackson, Lawrence, Jefferson, Ohio, Switzerland, Orange, Washington, Clark, Floyd, Harison, Crawford and Scott, $8,800. Total, $150,000.

In making the apportionment, population, taxable property and the membership strength of local Young Men's Christian associations were taken into consideration. The district executive secretaries are:

No. 1, A. B. Dickson, Gary; No. 2, J. Q. Ames, South Bend; No. 3, E. W. Pierce, Fort Wayne; No. 4, J. M. Davis, Lafayette; No. 5, E. M. Learner, Richmond; No. 6, A. H. Godard, Indianapolis; No. 7, Will A. House, Terre Haute; No. 8, H. H. Horne, Evansville; No. 9, H. P. Scott, Greensburg. These are all secretaries of the association in their home cities.

Indiana Artists in Poster Contest.

Indiana artists are to have an opportunity to turn their talents to patriotic purposes and to do their bit toward helping the government in the campaign for recruits for military service and the Red Cross, under plans worked out by Paul Richey of the Russel M. Seeds company. The plan embraces the bringing together of the talents of the artists in a comprehensive state-wide move with patriotism the underlying motive.

Every Indiana artist is asked to submit to a committee which will hold a meeting in the office of the Russell M. Seeds company, a poster designed to portray an appeal to recruits or to those who are in a position to assist the Red Cross.

Governor Inspects Camp.

Fort Harrison, Indianapolis, May 16. —Five thousand men, who hope to be among the commanders of the "first army of 500,000," marched across the fields at Fort Harrison for the first hike of the officers' reserve training camp. Maj. H. E. Ely, senior instructor, planned to put the tired men through signal drill. Before the week is ended the camp will be in full swing, with the "rookies" putting in 12 to 14 hours a day in military training.

Because of the failure of a small per cent of the applicants who had been accepted to report, some of the unsuccessful applicants will receive notice to report yet this week. A full camp of 5,200 men will be maintained. In addition, within two weeks, it is expected there will be three regiments of the regular army, a medical corps training camp and a field hospital company, increasing the number of soldiers to 12,500.

The majority of the men in the camp here are students fresh from college. Purdue university has the largest number in attendance, with Notre Dame a close second with 200 men. The football teams of Notre Dame, Purdue and Indiana university all are nearly disrupted by the enrollment of star athletes in the camp.

Governor Goodrich and staff will visit the fort on Wednesday and inspect the troops. His visit was postponed until the arrival of the Second Infantry band and his visit will be made a gala time at the fort.

Puts Bann on Fireworks.

Gov. James P. Goodrich, in an open letter to the citizens of Indiana, asks that the people forego the use of fireworks in the celebration of the Fourth of July. He says the celebrations might aid alien enemies to conceal incendiary operations, material used in fireworks is needed for munitions and millions of dollars are annully lost in fires started by fireworks.

No Party Affiliation.

The members of the Legislative Council of Indiana Women were urged not to affiliate with any political party until after full suffrage has been granted by the ratification of the proposed new constitution, in a talk by Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter, president, at the opening of a meeting of the legislative council in the state house. Mrs. McWhirter expressed her hope that some women would become delegates to the constitutional convention, but only in the capacity as delegates from legislative districts.

"Unknown"

Go forth where the far-flung prairies lie—
Where, 'neath the blue of a bending sky,
Bright roses beam, and beckon and say—
Take of our bounties this beaut'ous day;
Scatter them—scatter them deep—
Scatter them o'er where heroes sleep.

Go to the hills where the laurel grows—
Where soft winds sigh—where the tempest blows,
Gather the choicest gifts of God
That spring from the rich and rugged sod;
Scatter them—scatter them deep—
Scatter them o'er where heroes sleep.
Go to the tomb where the chieftain lies,
Where, carved in rock, of heroic days
A story is told—of vict'ries won—
Honors achieved—of duties well done;

Then softly approach that spot pressed down,
Where the stone lies low, the name "Unknown"—
"Unknown"—unknown in the sight of God?
He knoweth who sleeps beneath the sod.

'Twas a mother's boy—a brave, loving lad
Who knew no glory save his Nation's good;
Earth's bosom holds him in sacred embrace,
Nor time, nor storms shall his glory efface.

PROUD RECORD MADE BY GRAND ARMY IN PEACE

Marvelous Development of the Country May Be Dated From the Return of the Veterans From Their Hard-Won Fields of Glory.

THE GRAND ARMY of the Republic is but a remnant of the Union army which passed through Washington in the grand review at the close of the war, but it is a remnant eloquent in reminiscence and prophetic of the future of the nation. There were timid souls then whose consciences assumed more responsibility for the public welfare than their courage could support, who feared the consequences of releasing a million men from military discipline, and who would have placed restraints upon all in the interest of the general welfare. But these soldier-citizens went home and into the industrial, commercial and professional life where they had left off to go to war, or they went into the great West to conquer the plains and the mountains, gridiron the new country with railroads to carry back to the East the rich harvests they garnered, and added one of the most romantic chapters to American history by building a new empire where they had been taught as schoolboys to look for the Great American desert and the impassable barrier nature had planted to warn our people never to be tempted to try to extend their dominions beyond the Rocky mountains.

But these men, who had seen four years of war, had learned that there was no unconquerable deserts and no impassable barriers for those who have the courage to venture and go forward with intelligence and indomitable will. It was a member of the Grand Army who became the chief engineer of the Union Pacific railroad, which bound the two coasts together with bands of steel. It was a member of the Grand Army who explored the arid regions and projected the reclamation of that region years before congress authorized the work, and he selected the very sites where the government built the big dams to impound the waters which make the desert bloom like a rose garden. They were men from the Grand Army who made Iowa and Kansas, Nebraska and Minnesota great agricultural states and great political units in the nation.

This remnant of the Grand Army illustrates the courage, adaptability and self-control of the average American, who can be a peaceful citizen, then a soldier, and again a citizen, to devote his energies, aided by his experience in military life, to the greater development of his country. They fell out of the ranks in business and in politics, and the members of the Grand Army took their places in the halls of congress to legislate for the new conditions and occupied the White House to execute the laws. More than half the years since 1865 have seen members of the Grand Army in the president's chair, and their administrations were conspicuous as years of great progress and great glory for the nation.

PHIL KEARNEY EVER AT FRONT OF THE BATTLE

Federal Leader Who Fell at Chantilly Left a Memory That Survivors of Conflicts of the Civil War Delight in Honoring.

SO THE soldierly legend is still on its journey,—
That story of Kearny who scorned to yield!
'Twas the day when Jameson, fierce Berry, and Birney,
Against twenty thousand he rallied the field.
Where the red volleys poured, where the clamor rose highest,
Where the dead lay in clumps through the dwarf oak and pine,
Where the aim from the thicket was surest and highest—
No charge like Phil Kearny's along the whole line.

When the battle went ill, and the bravest were solemn,
Near the dark Seven Pines, where we still held our ground,
He rode down the length of the withering column,
And his heart at our war cry leapt up with a bound;
He snIffed, like his charger, the wind of the powder—
His sword waved us on and we answered the sign;
Loud our cheer as we rushed, but his laugh rang the louder,
"There's the devil's own fun, boys, along the whole line!"

How he strode his brown steed! How we saw his blade brighten
In the one hand still left—and the reins in his teeth!
He laughed like a boy when the holidays heighten,
But a soldier's glance shot from his visor beneath.
Up came the reserves to the melee infernal,
Asking where to go in—through the clearing or pine?
"Oh, anywhere! Forward! 'Tis all the same, Colonel;
You'll find lovely fighting along the whole line!"

Oh, evil the black shroud of night at Chantilly,
That hid him from sight of his brave men and tried!
Foul, foul sped the bullet that clipped the white lily,
The flower of our knighthood, the whole army's pride!
Yet we dream that he still—in that shadowy region
Where the dead form their ranks at the wan drummer's sign—
Rides on, as of old, down the length of his legion,
And the word still is "Forward!" along the whole line.
—Edmund Clarence Stedman.

BEHIND LINES AT VICKSBURG

Our provisions were becoming scarce and the Louisiana soldiers were eating rats as a delicacy, while mules were occasionally being carved up to appease the appetite. Mother would not eat mule meat, but we children ate some, and it tasted right good, having been cooked nicely, L. McRae Bell writes in Harper's Weekly. Wheat bread was a rarity and sweet potato coffee was relished by the adults. One evening it was currently reported that the enemy would open fire all around the line early the next morning, and an officer had persuaded Miss Lightcap, a young lady friend and neighbor, who was in the cave with us, that they would be safer nearer the lines under the cover of the hills. Mother consented to go, so up came the tent, a large basket was quickly packed with the meager stock of provisions, and away we went across Glass Bayou bridge, climbing the hill on the other side of the bridge late in the evening and traveling the road just behind our batteries, where all along were dug trenches for our soldiers to fight behind. This was a very dangerous route by daylight. The mortars were silent, resting, as all thought, for the next day's work. When the command was given to stop the tent was pitched in a kind of a ravine near the lines. Several tents were pitched there occupied by families living near by. Mother and Miss Lightcap spread down comforts and we all huddled in the tent to sleep. Just about daylight we were aroused by the belching cannon and before we could think where we were a cannon ball that had spent its force on the side of the hill came rolling into the tent. The young lady screamed as it rolled upon her, and in less time than it takes to tell it we were all up and out of the tent. Balls were whizzing, cannon booming from the rear, and mortars replying in rapid succession from the front.

Tassels Popular.

Huge silk tassels trim many separate skirts and one-piece dresses. On separate blouses and jackets the tassel idea is used, but here the quaint ornaments are smaller.

Sheer Veils Are Modish.

Chantilly veils are very modish. The patterns are sheer, so as not to throw large shadows on the face. They come in dark tones, blue or black, but are especially well liked in brown or sand tones, because these tints have a tendency to soften the complexion. The net foundation is rather thin. There are also some colored novelties. For instance, a large rose or chrysanthemum in soft colors may be placed over the crown of the hat.

Printed Wool Jerseys.

The newest thing in sports fabrics are the printed wool jerseys, in the bright and popular sports colors, printed in queer designs of several contrasting colors in a manner similar to sports silks.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

FAMOUS MEN WERE "BROKE"

Many Celebrities Who Have Swayed Millions and Ruled Continents Felt Pangs of Poverty.

Being "broke" is an experience through which some of the greatest men in history have had to pass.

Men who have swayed millions, ruled continents, commanded mighty armies, have not always been blessed with money.

Hard cash was the one thing which in the early days Napoleon could not lay hand on, and the same may be said of Marshal Soult, who, long before he became duke of Dalmatia was without a penny, says London Answers. Nor was his great comrade-in-arms, the heroic Ney, any better off when in his youth he donned the uniform of a private soldier.

We do not know for certain whether Columbus ever carried his coat to the pawnshop, but the miseries of a dungeon were certainly not the only ones which tried his heart, his pocket often being empty.

Owing to poverty, Dickens knew hardships as a boy, and Dumas, the author of "Monte Cristo," died a dependent.

A Promising Recruit.

On his way to the provincial hydro building in Toronto a few days ago, Sir Adam Beck was asked if he would "join up" by a recruiting sergeant in front of the armories. Sir Adam expressed his willingness, and the man led him to the door of the armories, asking him what unit he would like to join.

"I'll leave that to you," was the reply, "but what are the conditions as to age?"

"Under forty-eight," was the prompt reply of the recruiting sergeant, who took a second look at the vigorous outdoor countenance of Sir Adam.

"Oh, a few years doesn't matter. What's your job?"

"Well, I'm nearly sixty," replied Sir Adam, "and it's a hard job."

"You certainly have the courage, but perhaps you are a little over age, but what is your job?" replied the sergeant.

"I am remount commissioner for Canada," was Sir Adam's smiling reply, as he left the recruiting sergeant, who, after a salute, looked at the retreating figure and wondered whom he had been asking to enlist.—Montreal Herald.

A Timely Gift.

Belle—Bob writes that the smoke in the trenches is something fierce.

Beulah—Is that so? Well, that gives me a hint.

"A hint for what?"

"I promised to send him a birthday present."

"Well?"

"I'll send him a smoking jacket."

Agrees With Him.

"Gee, old fellow, you look fat and sassy! Whatcha living on nowadays?"

"My father-in-law."

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Hoe your row.

Eat your dandelions.

Why not an Indiana training camp for farm help?

Fort Foodstuffs is our chief stronghold in this war.

Some folks are not satisfied now—and we got the rain and it's cooler also.

Baseball is said to be in hard straights on account of the war. Well, tell me what is there that isn't?

Preachers are also called upon to do their bit. They might economize on the length of their sermons.

The strike at Wheeling, W. Va., recently presented the manufacturing of 2,000,000 tin cans a day. Every dog has his day.

Those who failed to see Marshal Joffre's tin star are informed he is not a town marshal. He is a field marshal, which is different.

People in all sections of the county are urged to send us any news items which they want published. We will not publish the contributors name and if there are errors of any kind in the article we will try to correct them all.

June 5 is the date of registration under the conscription law, and every voter between the age of 21 and 30 must register at his regular voting place regardless of his scrupples or opinions. Be prepared to answer the questions before going.

We are in favor of letting the expresident go to France with his volunteer army. We are in favor of permitting all other volunteers who wish to do so, go to Europe as an American army, under American officers, supported by the government and fighting under its flag. We were sorry when the military exigencies prevented the use of volunteers, because from the talk we have heard there must be a lot of married men and middle-aged men around here who would have gone. Probably, however, the chance was all they wanted; if they got it, they would turn it down.

It is surprising what passes between the lips of the average man. The profane language, the obscene language, the dirty talk that expresses sooty ideas, the coarse jokes and the careless flippancy about sacred things should not be, yet all of us are at times guilty of thoughtless utterance. How much better would men be if their tongues were as free from dirt when addressing their brothers as when they address their sisters, their mothers and their wives. The average man has one frame of mind for men and another for women, and each has its vocabulary to express its meaning.

NEWVILLE

Rev. Hively will preach the Memorial sermon Sunday at 2 p. m.

Mrs. Stella Sherman of Chicago was here last week visiting her relatives here.

The soldiers of 2nd. Ohio regiment were called to-gether for inspection, Wednesday.

Hugh Tracler and family and Preston Roberts motored to Fort Wayne last Saturday.

Lew Palmer's silo was damaged by lightening Saturday night, tearing off a part of the roof.

Mrs. Minnie Tarney and daughter, Fern, and Mrs. John Miller were Hicksville visitors, Tuesday.

Mrs. Mary Mitchell would like a position such as nursing or caring for old people. She has had experience along this line.

Decoration day services will be held in the Christian church, May 30 at 2 p. m. Rev. George Wolcott of Toledo will deliver the address.

Mrs. Elmer McDonald of Butler had a burnout to the extent of the contents of a bed room and clothes room. The fire was caused by a lighted candle.

Last Tuesday a cow belonging to Claud Tarney became entangled in a rope with which she was tied to a tree and fell with her head under her shoulder, being in a very suffi-cating position when found. She is recovering nicely now.

An auto load of people going from Garrett to Defiance struck a washout east of the crossroads, one mile west of town, and crippled the machine quite badly. That wasnout is certainly bad and should be filled immediately so accidets can be avoided.

The interior of the home of Joe Bovlick and family of Butler was ruined last week by fire caused by mismanaged gasoline stove. All of the furuiture, some costly, in three rooms was ruined, and the blackened paper hung in shreds from the ceiling and walls. The family moved into another house with what little they saved. (This is not local, but Mr. Bovlick has lived in this locality and we thought this incident to be of interest.)

Mr. and Mrs. Vernie Kelley and little daughter were Sunday guests of Mrs. Kelley's parents, Vol Hay and wife.

Henry Stalter and family were Thursday evening guests of Edd Billman and wife. Frank Wertman and wife were also callers.

INDIANA DOCTOR HOME FROM EUROPEAN SERVICE

Hoosier Surgeon who has been with Canadian Forces for Fifteen Months Says German Soldiers Think Wilson's Address is "Frameup."

After fifteen and one-half months on the battle fronts of France, Dr. Ira Nelson of Crothersville, Indiana, has arrived home with the latest first hand information regarding the progress of the European war. He left the fighting forces April 27 and was present when the big dents were made in the Hindenburg line.

He went to Europe with the Canadian troops and has held the rank of captain in the medical corps. He returne to the United States to obtain a commission in the American medical corps, now that the United States has entered the war, and as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made he will return to the front.

Dr. Nelson came back thoroughly impressed that German morale is at low ebb and that the war would soon be over were it not for the progress that is being made by the submarine campaign.

"When I left German soldiers were surrendering in whole battalions," he said, "their spirit was at low ebb—a marked contrast with the morale of the German army at the beginning of the war, when the German soldiers would continue to fight with their hands after their arms had been taken away from them.

"They have been led to believe that if they were captured they would be tortured and they faced death in their tracks willingly rather than submit, as they supposed, to lingering death by torture. In late months they seem to have gotten away from the idea that torture awaited them if captured and the willingness with which many have surrendered testifies to a weakened morale.

"It can not be denied that the submarine campaign is proving effective and it is the obstacle to an early peace. The allies already have Germany whipped on land, but they have to reckon with shortened rations and soldiers cannot do their best fighting on short rations."

Dr. Nelson said that every German soldier has an identification card on his person showing his name and number. When captured a soldier is first asked for this card and usually he pulled out of his pocket a copy of President Wilson's war address to Congress printed in German. The German soldiers, Dr. Nelson said, generally believe that this address was prepared in England and sent to Germany for political effect and that the United States and Germany are still on the friendliest terms.

ALLEN COUNTY'S OLDEST CITIZEN DIES AT 100

Christian Eling, age 100 years, died at the home of his son in Allen county Thursday following a short illness. While the deceased had been in failing health for the last three months, his condition was not thought to be critical until a few hours before his death. Mr. Eling enjoyed his one hundredth birthday anniversary last Saturday and although bedfast enjoyed himself greatly on this occasion.

The deceased man was born in Germany and came to United States at a very young age, settling in Allen county. Up to two years ago he was very active, seldom a day passing when he did not perform his chores about the farm. He is survived by his widow who is 95 years of age.

MARRIED MEN ARE NOT ALL EXEMPT FROM DRAFT.

The war department says that married men are not all exempt from the operation of the selective draft law merely because they are married.

Many married men will be drafted into the military service, but only when their wives and children are not financially dependent upon them.

Wives rich in their own right whose husbands fall within the prescribed age scale will have to give them up for the period of war.

This rule is not general, since some wealthy married men will be numbered among those who are of greater potential value to the nation in their usual vocations than they would be at the front.

Many unmarried men with relatives wholly dependent upon their earnings will be exempt for this reason, if for no other.

REGISTER OR GO TO JAIL.

DeKalb county men liable to army conscription who neglect to register on the day set aside by proclamation of President Wilson will face imprisonment for three years. This penalty is provided in draft regulations received by the county officials from the United States war department.

All men between the ages of 21 and 30 must register. Aliens are included in this order. Hours for registration at polling booths probably will be from 7 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock in the evening. Men intending to be out of the county must apply for registration blanks and mail these to the county clerk in time to be received on registration day.

AGE LIMITS FOR SELECT SERVICE ARMY

The word "inclusive" in the select service law, which says, "all male persons between the ages of 21 and 30, both inclusive shall be subject to registration," means all men between their twenty-first and thirty-first birthdays on the date of registration.

This is especially pointed out by authorities at Washington because inquiries showed many men who had passed their thirtieth birthday had the impression they would not be required to register.

All men must register, under penalty of one year imprisonment, except "officers and enlisted men of the regular army, the navy and the national guard and naval militia while in the service of the United States."

Exemptions are made after registration.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and droway most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Memorial Services

Memorial services will be held at Spencerville next Sunday, and arrangements have been made to observe the day in an appropriate manner. In the forenoon, Rev. Mumma will preach a sermon suitable to the occasion at the Lutheran church. At 2 p. m., all who intend to participate in the exercises at the cemetery will meet at the church, where conveyances for all, in the shape of automobiles, will be provided. After the graves have been decorated, Rev. Emmons, of the M. E. church, will deliver an address. All will then go to the river bridge, east of town, where flowers will be strewn upon the waters, a tribute to the American seamen who found watery graves in defense of the flag. Music will be furnished by the local drum corps.

Flourishing Bank

Two and a half years ago, Spencerville received a fine Christmas present—the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank. The institution was opened for business three days before, or on Dec. 22, 1914; but that is near enough to be numbered among Christmas presents Since that time, its history has been an era of success. Its resources, according to the last published statement, are $115.652.15, with loans and discounts of $98,642.84 and deposits of $81,705.91, all of which is pleasing to the management and an evidence that it is appreciated by the people of Spencerville and vicinity. Its success is due, in part, to the presence of that courteous gentleman, C. G. Rectenwall, behind the cashier's desk.

This article is not an advertisement, but the first of a series of write-ups of business houses of Spencerville and St. Joe.

Two Boys in Danger

On Wednesday evening about 6 o'clock, Richard, the 4-year-old son Charles Chapman and wife, and James, the 4-year-old son of James Vallieu and wife, were playing in the street before the home of the former's uncle, C. G. Rectenwall. At the same time, the cement mixer belonging to Merritt Butler was being hauled by. The two boys, unseen by the men in charge of the machine, tried to climb upon the tongue of the same. Both fell off, and only prompt action on the part of Kenneth Vallieu saved the Chapman boy from being killed. As it is, he had a hand mashed and was badly bruised. His little playmate had a foot crushed and was also bruised. No serious results are apprenended. Credit is due Kenneth Vallieu for his presence of mind.

Attended Conference

Rev. A. K. Mumma returned on Thursday from attendance on a three-day conference of the South district of the Northern Indiana synod of the Lutheran church, held at New Corydon. The general theme for discussion on the second day (Tuesday) was the "Reformation," in which he had a part. His sub-division was "The Place of the Reformation in History." He reports a very profitable and enjoyable meeting.

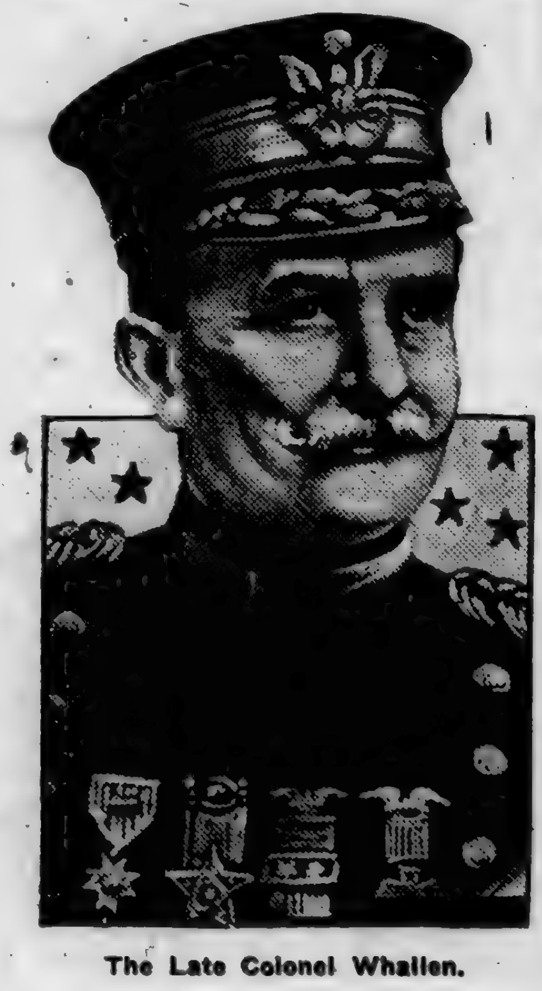
BOYS WHO "MADE GOOD" ON FIELDS OF BATTLE

In Northern and Southern Armies Alike Youngsters Showed Themselves Possessed of the Spirit Which Has Made Our Country Great.

COL. JOHN H. WHALLEN of Louisville, Ky., the youngest recruit of the Confederacy, had one of the most interesting war records of any of the Kentucky youths who left their homes to participate in the war between the states. Colonel Whallen died October 14, 1913. He was in poor health in the early summer of that year and did not attend the annual reunion of the Confederate veterans in Chattanooga.

Another heroic drummer boy was Robert Henry Henderson. When the Federals were trying to build a bridge of boats across the Rappahannock the task was rendered seemingly impossible by sharpshooters hidden in dwellings and shops on the opposite side.



The Late Colonel Whallen.

Volunteers were called for to cross the stream and clear them out. The officer in command chose one hundred men, who were to make a dash in boats. Little "Bobby," trying to enter one of the boats, was ordered out of it but told to push it off. He clung to the stern until he found himself on the other side of the stream. Then, opening the back door of a house, he captured a sharpshooter and brought him away as a prisoner. In the presence of his regiment General Burnside said to him: "Boy, I glory in your spunk. If you keep on this way for a few more years you will be in my place."

There was a boy in the Army of Northern Virginia, sixteen years old, who during a fierce engagement was struck by a bullet in the breast. At that moment his colonel ordered the men to dismount, springing, as he spoke, from his own horse.

"I will hold your horse, colonel," said the wounded boy, who lay helpless on the ground.

Pausing in the midst of a storm of bullets, the colonel replied: "But you can't do that, lad, you are dying."

"I know I am, colonel, but I can hold the reins when I am dead."

The colonel placed the bridle in the boy's hands. When the fight was over he hurried back and found him lying dead, the reins still wrapped tightly about his limp right hand.

When nine years old Michael F. Donoho left for the front in the summer of 1861 as a drummer boy and afterward served with the old One Hundred and Forty-ninth New York volunteers, with which regiment he was mustered out at Syracuse August 19, 1865. The lad faced the fires of the entire year, passing through all the campaigns on the Potomac, seeing the terrors of Gettysburg and knowing what it means to serve under the great generals Grant and Sheridan.

Bearing the scars of war over his body, but robust and cheery, Mr. Donoho, who was sixty-five years old May 27, now resides in Auburn, N. Y., proud in the knowledge that he is one of the "youngest" veterans of the Civil war.

Love's Tribute

Entwine 'round the tomb and the lowly grave
Blossoms of beauty for the true and brave:
Scatter them—scatter them deep—
Scatter them o'er where heroes sleep.

First G. A. R. Post.

Forty-nine years ago the first G. A. R. post was established in Decatur, Ill. Maj. Benjamin F. Stephenson, surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois regiment, and three army friends had drawn up the constitution two months before. The secret ritual was printed by veterans in the office of the Decatur Tribune, all of whom were members of the order. Its purpose was the "establishment and defense of the late soldiery of the United States, morally, socially and politically, with a view to inculcate a proper appreciation of their services and claims by the American people." The first national encampment was held in Indianapolis, 1866. Gen. S. A. Hurlbut became first commander in chief.

Sheridan.

NOT a sound was heard, not a drum was beat
As we carried the hero dying,
Save the muffled tread of the bearers' feet,
To the ship at anchor lying.

Not a drum was heard, not a bugle sound.
In the silence of the nation
The good ship passed us outward bound
To its solemn destination.

But the cannon wakes, and a mighty roar
Goes up in exaltation,
As we lay him by the silent shore,
The cry of a stricken nation.

The falling tear, the garb of woe
For a private grief's assuaging,
But the trumpet's blare and the fire's red glow
And the loosened passions raging

When a people walk in the funeral train,
And the drooping banners languish;
For half is pride and half is pain
In the throb of such an anguish.

We leave him where the river's flow
The storied heights are glassing,
And catch afar the muffled, slow
Steps of the ages passing.

—Chicago Ledger.

VICTORY CREDITED TO WOMAN

Federal Authorities Said to Have Made Campaign on Lines Suggested by Anna Ella Carroll.

History should be rewritten from beginning to end for the benefit of persons who are not satisfied until they have found that the man who got the credit for a particular deed did not deserve it, but that it was due to some obscure individual who waited in vain for recognition. At present we have the truth about isolated incidents only. It has taken us fifty years, for example, to find out that a woman came to the rescue in 1862 with the suggestion that resulted in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry. Lincoln sent her—her name was Anna Ella Carroll—to St. Louis to write about an expedition preparing to descend the Mississippi by gunboat. She reported that the river was frowning with fortifications and that the tides were unfavorable. Lincoln and the cabinet were worried. Then Miss Carroll "suggested that the true strategic line was the Tennessee, which had not been fortified," and to make it plain to the stupid men in charge of the operations, drew maps and submitted a written plan of campaign. Lincoln—but anyone could know the rest. Did not Grant capture Forts Donelson and Henry? Then came the tragedy. "Discussions were held in the senate and house to try to discover how this brilliant plan was originated. Miss Carroll sat in the gallery, quietly listening. The cabinet had decided it would antagonize army leaders if they knew they were following the direction of a civilian, and a woman." Undaunted, she showed how to take Vicksburg and Island No. 10. If Lincoln had not died so suddenly, she would have had her reward and our history books would read very differently—and our newspapers could print other versions of the events, just as pretty.—New York Evening Post.

Deer Makes Calls in City.

Lean and gaunt, as though it had just completed a long trip, a doe stalked out of the brush on Bailey peninsula, and after a stiff-legged trot up Orcas street, turned into the yard of Mrs. A. E. Esper, at Orcas street and Wilson avenue. It ran about the yard for a few minutes and then trotted into the yard of Virgil Stewart, at Orcas street and Fifty-first avenue.

Before anyone could make an attempt to stop it, the animal ran down toward the brush that skirts the shore of Lake Washington and disappeared. When last seen it was running toward Leschi park.

Residents of the district, some of whom have been frightened at intervals during the past two months by the reports of cougars on Bailey peninsula believe that it was the deer that was sighted on former occasions.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 27

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND HIS WORK —(PENTECOSTAL LESSON).

LESSON TEXT—John 15:26-27; 16:7-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—He shall teach you all things.—John 14:26.

This lesson follows chapter 15:1-4. The emphasis Jesus placed upon the new and deeper intimacy into which the disciples were about to enter, and which involved a participation in persecutions (v. 20). However, as a garrison and helper when this persecution should come, the believers are to have in their lives the Holy Spirit.

I. The Believer and the Spirit (vv. 26-27). The "paraclete" (helper) was to proceed from the Father, but Jesus was to send him. He is called the "Spirit of Truth" because it is his work to reveal the truth, and it is through his teachings only that anyone may know the truth. Jesus is the truth (ch. 14:6), and the Spirit of Truth is to enable believers to testify concerning Jesus. It qualifies them for such testimony. The disciples also had the added qualification of experience for "ye have been with me from the beginning." The disciples were eye witnesses of what he did and what he was, and heard and knew all that he claimed for himself and what his life proved itself to be.

II. The Believer and Persecution (16:1-6). This section has not been selected by the committee, but as a part of the lesson we cannot overlook it. In it the Master enumerates specifically things that were to come to the disciples and that they might "remember." He also mentions the fact that these things are to come after he has gone away. As a relief from sorrow (v. 6), the Master goes on to show the relation of the Spirit to the world.

III. The Holy Spirit in the World (vv. 7-11). It was profitable for the disciples that Jesus should go, that another Divine friend was to take his place. This is the best section in all the Bible to teach the personality of the Holy Spirit. The personal pronouns in this section are very significant, there being seven in the thirteenth verse alone. The word "Comforter" here used means that and much more. It is the same word translated "advocate." In I John 2:1, it means one who is called upon to stand beside another as a helper, counselor, guide and friend. Jesus had been this to his disciples thus far, but he was going away, and another Friend was coming, who should not only be with them, but should dwell in them (Ch. 14:16, 17). The Comforter has come, and without him we can do nothing. He is the one who convicts the world "of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." Of sin, not because they have broken the moral code, but because they do not accept Jesus Christ as the Messiah (Hebrews 10:28. See ch. 3:18-20). In the second place, he is to convict the world of righteousness. The Holy Spirit has no other channel through which he can get at the world except through those who are already saved. He shows the world its error about righteousness; also that Jesus is the only righteous one, and righteousness is only possible to us in him (Phil. 3:9 R. V.). Because he has lived the right life, having fulfilled all righteousness, and gone on high, he therefore convicts men, but the Spirit does his work through the agency of the word. Man needs to know first of all that he is a sinner; second, that Jesus "the righteousness of God," has provided for us, and it is the Holy Spirit who alone can show these two things to men. In the third place, he convicts the world of judgment because "the prince of this world is judged." This judgment is past (see John 12:31), for Jesus has conquered Satan. Certainly this is a truth that needs to be emphasized in this day. The judgment of sin and punishment for sin, due to unbelief or rejection of Jesus Christ, is seldom preached in our day.

IV.—The Spirit and Truth (vv. 12-15). There was much more that the Master might say to the disciples, but they were not ready to bear it (v. 12). He, however, looks forward to the day when the Spirit shall come, and they will be ready to receive these things. The Spirit will guide them into truth, all truth, for he shall not speak of himself (he will not bear witness unto or speak "from" himself) but the things that he will speak of will be concerning Jesus. The real evidence of the presence of the Holy Spirit in a believer or in a congregation is the degree of exaltation given to Jesus Christ.

There is a progressive intimacy in John. Jesus first calls those who are at his side, servants (Ch. 13:13). He next calls them friends (Ch. 15:15) and lastly he calls them brethren (Ch. 20:17). This is the law of Christian experience.

Sunday school teachers should certainly take advantage of this lesson to bring out the work of the Spirit (vv. 8, 9, 10); the gifts of the Spirit (I Cor. 12); and the fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22, 23). Let us be sure that our scholars know what it means to have a definite, intimate, personal relation with the all powerful one.

CANADA'S IMMIGRATION

Increased by About Sixty Per Cent in Past Six Months.

That Canada is at war is now more fully appreciated on this side of the boundary line, now that the United States has stepped alongside its northern neighbor and linked hands in the great struggle for a freer democracy throughout the civilized world. As a result of this a greater interest than ever is seen in the mutual effort to develop both the United States and Canada. Recently, just before the time that the United States declared its intention to enter the contest and contribute of its resources to the defeat of the autocracy, whose design was to permeate the world, Western Canada made an appeal for farm labor to till the fields and prepare the soil for the crops of grain that were necessary to feed the fighting forces and keep up the requirements necessary for the Allies. The responses were so great that before half the time limit expired, over six thousand laborers were secured. This was not sufficient, but once the United States was declared to be in a condition of war, and farm labor required here to meet any exigency as to short rations that might arise, the sister to the north, withdrew from attempts, which might mean a restriction of the farm labor supply in the United States. But even with this it is thought Canada will now be fairly well supplied.

Apart, however, from the farm labor proposition, it is gratifying from both a United States and Canadian point of view that the immigration of farmers to take up homestead lands and to purchase improved and unimproved land in Canada, has shown such a wonderful increase in the past three months. The great struggle for increasing the food supply has a broader and greater significance than ever. The food must come into existence, whether the rich soils of the United States or those of Canada be the factor.

It is altogether probable that the action of the Canadian Government in taking the duty off wheat going into Canada, thus automatically lifting the duty off that coming into the United States, may not be responsible for an increased immigration to Canada. Canada's reputation for growing larger average yields and a better quality of grain, and on lands, many of which are free, as well as those that range from $15 to $35 an acre, is an appeal that is being responded to by farmers who are now renting high-priced lands, is another reason for expecting an increasing number of farmers from the United States.

Mr. W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration at Ottawa, Canada, recently gave out figures concerning immigration from the United States, which shows that the increase in the past three or four months was 60 per cent over the same period last year, and Mr. Scott forecasts that during the calendar year of 1917 there will be over one hundred per cent increase and be much heavier than for many years past. Mr. Scott declares that already this spring more settlers' effects have entered Canada than crossed during the whole of last year, and the movement has just merely started.

The new settlers are coming from numerous states through the ports of Emerson, North Portal and Coutts, as well as from Oregon and Washington, through Kingsgate and Vancouver.

There arrived in Saskatchewan during the year ending December 31, 1916, a total of 8,136 persons as compared with 5,812 during the twelve months previous. At the same time nearly twice as many immigrants passed through the immigration department at Edmonton, Alberta, in the last twelve months as for the same period of the year before.

The number of settlers from Eastern Canada migrating to the west also increased. From January 1 to March 31, 1917, the number of cars of stock that passed through the Winnipeg yards was 750, as compared with 361 last year. A fair estimate of the value of each car would be about $2,000, which means that the west has secured additional live stock to the value of $150,000 or more, during the first three months of 1917, not taking into account that brought in by immigrants from the United States.—Advertisement.

An Effective Plea.

"What do you mean by begging from door to door when your country needs such husky fellows as you?" asked the patriotic person, indignantly.

"I've walked sixty miles to enlist, guv'nor," answered the tramp. "Dis is de las' lap of the journey, an' I t'ought under de circumstances you wouldn't mind givin' me a handout."

"Certainly not. Step around to the kitchen and I'll have the cook fix you up a good breakfast."

Incompatible.

"That was a bald excuse he gave about firing off his pistol."

"Couldn't have been a bald excuse; it had a hair trigger."

Amateur Gardening.

"Planted anything in your garden yet?" "Both rubbers, two pencils and a fountain pen."

The Value of Second Thought.

The other night a friend of ours went to a formal party, all duded up for the occasion. He had blown himself for a new silk hat, in fact, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Presumably he had a good time at the party. When he left, he was jaunty—so much so that he made a literal faux pas, which means a false step. He slipped on the sidewalk and sat down on that perfectly good silk hat.

He was good and mad. The hat was new, and fitted him perfectly. He swore with great bitterness and for several minutes. But that did him no good. It was after he had ceased to curse that a bright thought struck him. He looked at the bum lid closely. He smiled.

He sneaked back into the house he had just left, laid the ruined chapeau on a chair in the hall, took his own hat from the peg where it was hanging—and left again.

RED CROSS—GOODNESS YES.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

GRAY WOLF SUFFERS PERMANENT INJURY AND BECOMES DEPENDENT ON KAZAN FOR LIFE ITSELF—THE BIG WOLF-DOG LOSES HIS HUMAN FRIENDS AND IS LONESOME

Kazan, a vicious Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, saves the life of Thorpe, his master, and is taken along when the master goes to civilization to meet his bride and return with her to the frozen country. Isobel, Kazan's new mistress, wins his instant affection by her kindness. Back in the wilderness, McCready, a guide, beats Thorpe senseless and attacks the bride. Kazan kills the assailant, flees to the woods, joins a wolf pack, whips the leader, takes a young mate, Gray Wolf, and a few nights later drives off the pack which had attacked Pierre, a sick man, his daughter, Joan, and her baby. Then, held by Joan's kindess, Kazan stays with her when Pierre dies and helps her drag the sledge to a settler's cabin, saving the lives of mother and daughter. With Gray Wolf, he establishes a lair on Sun Rock, near Joan's home. Gray Wolf has pups. She is attacked by a lynx, which permanently injures her and kills the pups before Kazan kills the lynx.

Gray Wolf was no longer in the moonlight. Close to the two rocks lay the limp lifeless little bodies of the three pups. The lynx had torn them to pieces. With a whine of grief Kazan approached the two boulders and thrust his head between them. Gray Wolf was there, crying to herself in that terrible sobbing way. He went in, and began to lick her bleeding shoulders and head. All the rest of that night she whimpered with pain. With dawn she dragged herself out to the lifeless little bodies on the rock.

And then Kazan saw the terrible work of the lynx. For Gray Wolf was blind—not for a day or a night, but blind for all time. A gloom that no sun could break had become her shroud. And perhaps again it was that instinct of animal creation, which often is more wonderful than man's reason, that told Kazan what had happened. For he knew now that she was helpless—more helpless than the little creatures that had gamboled in the moonlight a few hours before. He remained close beside her all that day.

Vainly that day did Joan call for Kazan. Her voice rose to the Sun Rock, and Gray Wolf's head snuggled closer to Kazan, and Kazan's ears dropped back, and he licked her wounds. Late in the afternoon Kazan left Gray Wolf long enough to run to the bottom of the trail and bring up the snow-shoe rabbit. Gray Wolf muzzled the fur and flesh, but would not eat. Still a little later Kazan urged her to follow him to the trail. He no longer wanted to stay at the top of the Sun Rock, and he no longer wanted Gray Walf to stay there. Step by step he drew her down the winding path away from her dead puppies. She would move only when he was very near her—so near that she could touch his scarred flank with her nose.

They came at last to the point in the trail where they had to leap down a distance of three or four feet from the edge of a rock, and here Kazan saw how utterly helpless Gray Wolf had become. She whined, and crouched twenty times before she dared make the spring, and then she jumped stiff-legged, and fell in a heap at Kazan's feet. After this Kazan did not have to urge her so hard, for the fall impinged on her the fact that she was safe only when her muzzle touched her mate's flank. She followed him obediently when they reached the plain, trotting with her foreshoulder to his hip.

Kazan was heading for a thicket in the creek bottom half a mile away, and a dozen times in that short distance Gray Wolf stumbled and fell. And each time that she fell Kazan learned a little more of the limitations of blindness. Once he sprang off in pursuit of a rabbit, but he had not taken twenty leaps when he stopped and looked back. Gray Wolf had not moved an inch.

All that day they remained in the thicket. In the afternoon he visited the cabin. Joan and her husband were there, and both saw at once Kazan's torn side and his lacerated head and shoulders.

"Pretty near a finish fight for him," said the man, after he had examined him. "It was either a lynx or a bear. Another wolf could not do that."

For half an hour Joan worked over him, talking to him all the time, and fondling him with her soft hands. She bathed his wounds in warm water, and then covered them with a healing salve, and Kazan was filled again with that old restful desire to remain with her always, and never to go back into the forests. For an hour she let him lie on the edge of her dress, with his nose touching her foot, while she worked on baby things. Then she rose to prepare supper, and Kazan got up—a little wearily—and went to the door. Gray Wolf and the gloom of the night were calling him, and he answered that call with a slouch of his shoulders and a drooping head. Its old thrill was gone. He watched his chance, and went out through the door. The moon had risen when he rejoined Gray Wolf. She greeted his return with a low whine of joy, and muzzled him with her blind face. In her helplessness she looked happier than Kazan in all his strength.

From now on, during the days that followed, it was a last great fight between blind and faithful Gray Wolf and the woman. If Joan had known of what lay in the thicket, if she could once have seen the poor creature to whom Kazan was now all life—the sun, the stars, the moon, and food—she would have helped Gray Wolf. But as it was she tried to lure Kazan more and more to the cabin, and slowly she won.

At last the great day came, eight days after the fight on the Sun Rock. Kazan had taken Gray Wolf to a wooded point on the river two days before, and there he had left her the preceding night when he went to the cabin. This time a stout babiche thong was tied to the collar round his neck, and he was fastened to a staple in the log wall. Joan and her husband were up before it was light next day. The sun was just rising when they all went out, the man carrying the baby, and Joan leading him. Joan turned and locked the cabin door, and Kazan heard a sob in her throat as they followed the man down to the river. The big canoe was packed and waiting. Joan got in first, with the baby. Then, still holding the babiche thong, she drew Kazan up close to her, so that he lay with his weight against her.

The sun fell warmly on Kazan's back as they shoved off, and he closed his eyes, and rested his head on Joan's lap. Her hand fell softly on his shoulder. He heard again that sound which the man could not hear, the broken sob in her throat, as the canoe moved slowly down to the wooded point.

Joan waved her hand back at the cabin, just disappearing behind the trees.

"Good-by!" she criedly sadly. "Good-by—" And then she buried her face close down to Kazan and the baby, and sobbed.

The man stopped paddling.

"You're not sorry—Joan?" he asked.

They were drifting past the point now, and the scent of Gray Wolf came to Kazan's nostrils, rousing him, and bringing a low whine from his throat.

"You're not sorry—we're going?" Joan shook her head.

"No," she replied. "Only I've—always lived here—in the forests—and they're—home!"

The point with its white finger of sand, was behind them now. And Kazan was standing rigid, facing it. The man called to him, and Joan lifted her head. She, too, saw the point, and suddenly the babiche leash slipped from her fingers, and a strange light leaped into her blue eyes as she saw what stood at the end of that white tip of sand. It was Gray Wolf. Her blind eyes were turned toward Kazan. At last Gray Wolf, the faithful, understood. Scent told her what her eyes could not see. Kazan and the man-smell were together. And they were going—going—going—

"Look!" whispered Joan.

The man turned. Gray Wolf's forefeet were in the water. And now, as the canoe drifted farther and farther away, she settled back on her haunches, raised her head to the sun which she could not see and gave her last long wailing cry for Kazan.

The canoe lurched. A tawny body shot through the air—and Kazan was gone.

The man reached forward for his rifle. Joan's hand stopped him. Her face was white.

"Let him go back to her! Let him go—let him go!" she cried. "It is his place—with her."

And Kazan reaching the shore, shook the water from his shaggy hair, and looked for the last time toward the woman. The canoe was drifting slowly around the first bend. A moment more and it had disappeared. Gray Wolf had won.

CHAPTER XII.

The Days of Fire.

From the night of the terrible fight with the big gray lynx on the top of the Sun Rock, Kazan remembered less and less vividly the old days when he had been a sledge-dog, and the leader of a pack. He would never quite forget them, and always there would stand out certain memories from among the rest, like fires cutting the blackness of night. But as a man dates events from his birth, his marriage, his freedom from a bondage, or some foundation-step in his career, so all things seemed to Kazan to begin with two tragedies which had followed one fast upon the other after the birth of Gray Wolf's pups.

The first was the fight on the Sun Rock, when the big gray lynx had blinded his beautiful wolf mate for all time, and had torn her pups into pieces. He in turn had killed the lynx. But Gray Wolf was still blind. Vengeance had not been able to give her sight. She could no longer hunt with him, as they had hunted with the wild wolf-packs out on the plain, and in the dark forests. So at thought of that night he always snarled, and his lips curled back to reveal his inch-long fangs.

The other tragedy was the going of Joan, her baby and her husband. Something more infallible than reason told Kazan that they would not come back. Brightest of all the pictures that remained with him was that of the sunny morning when the woman and the baby he loved, and the man he endured because of them, had gone away in the canoe, and often he would go to the point, and gaze longingly down-stream, where he had leaped from the canoe to return to his blind mate.

So Kazan's life seemed now to be made up chiefly of three things: his hatred of everything that bore the scent or mark of the lynx, his grieving for Joan and the baby, and Gray Wolf. It was natural that the strongest passion in him should be his hatred of the lynx, for not only Gray Wolf's blindness and the death of the pups, but even the loss of the woman and the baby he laid to that fatal struggle on the Sun Rock. From that hour he became the deadliest enemy of the lynx tribe. Wherever he struck the scent of the big gray cat he was turned into a snarling demon, and his hatred grew day by day, as he became more completely a part of the wild.

He found that Gray Wolf was more necessary to him now than she had ever been since the day she had left the wolf-pack for him. He was three-quarters dog, and the dog-part of him demanded companionship. There was only Gray Wolf to give him that now. They were alone. Civilization was four hundred miles south of them. The nearest Hudson's Bay post was sixty miles to the west. Often, in the days of the woman and the baby, Gray Wolf had spent her nights alone out in the forest, waiting and calling for Kazan. Now it was Kazan who was lonely and uneasy when he was away from her side.

In her blindness Gray Wolf could no longer hunt with her mate. But gradually a new code of understanding grew up between them, and through her blindness they learned many things that they had not known before. By early summer Gray Wolf could travel with Kazan, if he did not move too swiftly. She ran at his flank, with her shoulder or muzzle touching him, and Kazan learned not to leap, but to trot. Very quickly he found that he must choose the easiest trails for Gray Wolf's feet. When they came to a space to be bridged by a leap, he would muzzle Gray Wolf and whine, and she would stand with ears alert—listening. Then Kazan would take the leap, and she understood the distance she had to cover. She always overleaped, which was a good fault.

In another way, and one that was destined to serve them many times in the future, she became of greater help than ever to Kazan. Scent and hearing entirely took the place of sight. Each day developed these senses more and more, and at the same time there developed between them the dumb language whereby she could impress upon Kazan what she had discovered by scent or sound. It became a curious habit of Kazan's always to look at Gray Wolf when they stopped to listen, or to scent the air.

After the fight on the Sun Rock, Kazan had taken his blind mate to a thick clump of spruce and balsam in the river bottom, where they remained until early summer. Every day for weeks Kazan went to the cabin where Joan and the baby—and the man—had been. For a long time he went hopefully, looking each day or night to see some sign of life there. But the door was never open. The boards and saplings at the windows always remained. Never a spiral of smoke rose from the clay chimney. Grass and vines began to grow in the path. And fainter and fainter grew that scent which Kazan could still find about it—the scent of man, of the woman, the baby.

Going farther into the north woods, Kazan and Gray Wolf have other stirring adventures—a thrilling episode is described in the next installment.

FIND NEW USES.

Breweries lend themselves readily with little change to the manufacture of ice and for cold storage purposes. Packing plants and creameries and ice cream factories frequently succeed breweries. A former brewery in Aberdeen, Wash., is now canning clams. One in Spokane is manufacturing vinegar. In Olympia the brewery plant is being used in the dairy products business, while in Bellingham the farmers got together and bought the brewery to use for a co-operative creamery. A former brewery in Seattle, the largest in the state, is remodeled for the manufacture of a fine grade of table sirup from cracked rice, and denatured alcohol will be produced as a by-product. The Coors' brewery of Golden, Colo., is successfully manufacturing malted milk in a portion of the plant, the remainder being used in the production from Colorado clay of a fine porcelain. It is impossible to give in detail the entire list of transformations, but the products being turned out in former breweries include in addition to the articles already mentioned, yeast, dry cells, soap, chemicals, moving picture films, paint, varnish and loganberry juice.

AT FEARFUL COST.

England has at last waked up to the ravages made on her finances by drink. A writer in the Christian of London informs us that since the war began the liquor trade has used up the labor of lifting 60,000,000 tons; that the great Pyramid of Egypt could have been pulled down and reset three times over by the labor used in landing the drink stuff at the London docks. This amounts to more than all the rest of the unloading together. With regard to food, it is said there would have been three and a half million more tons of food but for the traffic. From every home an amount equal to a pound has been stolen daily since the war began. The labor is considered equivalent to the whole of the United Kingdom having stood idle for a hundred days.

The war savings committee has been preaching economy to ladies in their dress, and discovers now that two and a half million dollars are squandered daily for a drink that damages health. —Louisa A'hmuty Nash, in the Union Signal.

IN ARKANSAS.

The mayor of Little Rock thus testifies to the success of prohibition:

"Merchants in ten lines of business in my city have consulted and testified that their collections are far better this year than last. The sales sheets of many retail dealers show a steady increase in the amount of business done, while the records of the chamber of commerce show a steady increase in the number of carload shipments of all kinds. The post office reports an increase in business of $360,543.63—which is considered phenomenal for a post office in a town the size of Little Rock. Bank deposits show an increase of $3,500,000; bank clearings, of over $11,000,000. Savings accounts far exceed in number those of any previous year. The referee in bankruptcy says there is no business in his line."

A CEREBRAL POISON.

Alcohol is specifically and to all intents and purposes a cerebral poison. It seizes with its disorganizing energy upon the brain, that mysterious part whose steady and undisturbed action holds man in true and responsible relations with his family, with society, and with God; and it is this fearful fact that gives to government and society their tremendous interest in the question.—Youmans on Alcohol.

NEED A CORONER.

Instead of a national liquor commission to study the liquor problem, as advocated by the wets, it is suggested that a coroner's jury would fit the case better.

SLAVES OF DRUG HABIT.

The New York World is authority for the statement that in New York there are 200,000 slaves to the drug habit.

BUILDINGS IN USE.

Of 335 saloons in Portland, Ore., in 1915, only 21 are vacant. Many saloon shacks and shanties have been replaced by substantial buildings rented at increased rents.

FAVORS PROHIBITION.

The Western Retail Implement, Vehicle and Hardware association, with a membership of 4,200, has placed itself on record as favoring nation-wide prohibition.

TERSELY AND FORCEFULLY PUT.

"Scientists have proved that alcohol, after its first exhilaration, is a form of 'knock-out drops' that puts the real, civilized man out of business, releasing the primitive, latent savage."

This pronouncement is from the "How to Be Healthy" department of the Chicago Herald, conducted by the Life Extension institute. The institute is counseled by a large scientific board of eminent authorities, including Prof. Irving Fisher, chairman hygiene reference board; Gen. William C. Gorgas, consultant on sanitation.

Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. Benefits From Gardening.

The man who puts in honest and conscientious work on his garden must be a winner, even if not one radish ever finds its way to his dinner table. He is benefited by the vigorous outdoor work. He is strengthened by the consciousness of having done his best. And he has gained valuable experience which will enable him to do better next year.

It is safe to predict that the gardens that fail to produce anything will be very few. The spirit which inspires the back-yard gardener is the spirit that works miracles. Of those who undertake the work with little hope the majority are likely to be happily surprised. Even partial success is an abundant reward, and it will be an incentive for more intelligent though not more conscientious work in the future.—Exchange.

Big Patriotic Speech

A free lecture will be given at 7:30 P. M. Tuesday evening at the M. P. church. Walter D. Stump, one of the brilliant attorneys of Auburn, will deliver the address. Under the auspices of the Farmers' Benefit club. A cordial invitation is extended to everyone to be present, which will give a better insight into the cause and effect of the grave national crisis and which will show them the duty they owe and can best pay to the country and flag they love. No real American with the true blood of his native land will fail to avail himself of the information and spirit to be had at this meeting.

An Ordinance

Prohibiting the storage, sale, discharge or firing of fire works and other pyrotechnic display, providing penalties for the violation of the same and repealing all ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the same.

Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the Town of St. Joe, Indiana:

Section 1. The discharge, firing or use of all fire crackers, rockets, torpedoes, Roman candles or other fire works or substances designed and intended for pyrotechnic display, and of all pistols, canes, cannons or other appliances using blank cartridges or caps containing chlorate of potash mixture or other explosives is hereby prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana, or within two miles thereof.

Sec. 2 The sale of fire works at retail is prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana.

Sec. 3. The storage or sale of fire works at wholesale is prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana.

Sec. 4. Any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this ordinance as regards the storage and sale of fire works shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not less than ten ($10) dollars nor more than twenty-five ($25) dollars for each day's failure of compliance. Provided also, that violations of other sections of this ordinance shall be considered a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding ten ($10) dollars.

Sec. 5. The chief of fire department may, at his discretion, remove or have removed, at the owner's expense, all stocks of fire works or other combustibles exposed for sale or held in stock in violation of this ordinance.

Sec. 6. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Sec. 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

The above ordinance was passed at the urgent request of Governor Goodrich and State Fire Marshal Friedley, and its enforcement means a safe and sane Fourth. The time has gone by when patriotism can be expressed without endangering life and property. If the damage were confined to the person creating the same, it would not be so bad; but an innocent person is nearly always the sufferer.

Them Lights Is "Bum"

No 'lectric lights till mornin',
No 'lectric lights till mornin',
No 'lectric lights till mornin',
And the daylight doth appear.

Time.—About 11:30 p. m.

Place.—Somewhere in St. Joe.

Scene.—none; unseen, no way of telling.

Darkness moved upon the face of the earth. Yes, moved is RIGHT, and it moved toward St. Joe and there rested from its labors over night—all the darkness since the time of creation. The man that solidifies air has nothing over St. Joe. We have darkness in compact form. It descends upon the town at night like the plagues upon Egypt.

Coming down the street was a cigar. The cigar was lighted, and it wabbled from side to side like a will-o'-the-wisp with a jag, evidence that the man behind the cigar was unsteadily returning from an outing with "the boys." Suddenly, the tiny ball of fire lurched to one side and was extinguished in a shower of sparks.

A tree!

The man that had been behind the cigar steadied himself with an effort and zig-zagged toward where his muddled brain told him the center of the street lay. He located it all right, but he failed to locate a cross walk that became tangled up with his feet. The lower portion of his anatomy stopped short, but he lost control of the upper portion. Result, the two portions arrived at the same level.

"I win!" hiccoughed the jag. "Bet m'se'f couldn't walk a block 'thout (hic) fallin' down—bet fif'y cench. First money ever won in a' m'life. I win, b'gosh!"

"Need any help?" inquired the man on the sidewalk, who now had someone to pity beside himself.

What was the man on the sidewalk doing? Nothing, poor chap; but it wasn't his fault: he was out in the dark because he couldn't see where he ought to head in, the electric lights being slightly below the average that night.

"Naw!" replied the jag, "I'm a' right—jusht winnin' bet, thash all. I'm a' right—never berrer. Git up when I (hic) fe' like it—razzer set down now."

It was evident to the man on the sidewalk that the jag was endeavoring to make good his wish to sit down. After several efforts and much mumbling to himself, he succeeded in raising himself to the desired position.

"Shay," continued the jag, "been Fo' Wayne—circus. Gor'er drinkin' till I saw all ammimuls ever cre-AY-ted—kep' on drinkin f'fear I'd see mo' ammimuls. Got 'toxicated—polluted. Ses I, S' Joe fer mine. Shay, pardner, 'fever ye git 'toxcicated, hitterrup fer S' Joe. Bes' place in world fer blind folks an' jags. One can't see an' tusser can't be seen—don't wanta be seen. Thash me. Take my advice. Hitterrup f'r S' Joe. Fa' down; t'be sure. Fa' dow', anyhow. 'Snow diffurnce, bump er groun' in 'lecric light just er same zin darkness."

The jag paused for a moment and then cried out:

"Bully f'r S't Joe 'lecric lights!"

For the next few minutes, the jag's time was divided between hitting the earth and getting upon his feet. He succeeded in the latter, and moved off unsteadily, singing as he went:

No 'lecric ligh's till mornin',
No 'lecric ligh's till mornin',
No 'lecric ligh's till mornin',
An' the dayligh' doth appear.
H-o-o-RAY!

THE NAME OF OLD GLORY.

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

I.

Old Glory! say who
By the ships and the crew,
And the long, blended ranks of the gray and the blue,—
Who gave you, Old Glory, the name that you bear
With such pride everywhere
As you cast yourself free to the rapturous air
And leap out full-length as we're wanting you to?
Who gave you that name, with the ring of the same,
And the honor and fame so becoming to you?
Your stripes stroked in ripples of white and of red,
With your stars at their glittering best overhead—
By day or by night
Their delightfulest light
Looking down from their little square heaven of blue!—
Who gave you the name of Old Glory? Say, who—
Who gave you the name of Old Glory?
The old banner lifted, and faltering then
In vague lisps and whispers, fell silent again.

II.

Old Glory—speak out!—we are asking about
How you happened to "favor" a name, so to say,
That sounds so familiar and careless and gay
As we cheer it and shout in our wild breezy way—
We—the CROWD, every man of us calling you that—
We—Tom, Dick and Harry—each swinging his hat
And hurrahing "Old Glory!" like you were our kin,
When—LORD!—we all know we're as common as sin!
Yet it just seems like you HUMOR us all
And waft us your thanks, as we hail you and fall
Into line, with you over us, waving us on
Where our glorified, sanctified betters have gone.
And this is the reason we're wanting to know—
(And we're wanting it so!—
Where our own fathers went we're willing to go.)—
Who gave you the name of Old Glory—Oho!—
Who gave you the name of Old Glory?
The old flag unfurled with a billowy thrill
For an instant, then wistfully sighed and was still.

III.

Old Glory, the story we're wanting to hear
Is what the plain facts of your christening were—
For your name, just to hear it,
Repeat it and cheer it, 'is a tang to the spirit
As salt as a tear;—
And seeing you fly, and the boys marching by,
There's a shout in the throat and a blur in the eye
And an aching to live for you always—or die.
If dying, we'll still keep you waving on high.
And so, by our love
For you, floating above,
And the scars of all wars and the sorrows thereof,
Who gave you the name of Old Glory, and why
Are we thrilled at the name of Old Glory?
Then the old banner leaped, like a sail in the blast,
And fluttered an audible answer at last.

IV.

And it spake, with a shake of the voice, and it said:
By the driven snow-white and the living qlood-red
Of thy bars, and their heaven of stars overhead—
By the symbol conjoined of them all, skyward cast,
As I float from the steeple or flap from the mast,
Or droop o'er the sod where the long grasses nod—
My name is as old as the glory of God!
So I came by the nama of Old Glory!

Observe Decoration Day

More than the usual significance attended memorial services this year. Heretofore, the day has been given over to a review of the past, but the present and the future had a prominent place in the 1917 program. As wreaths of flowers were laid upon the graves of the soldier dead, the thought of the innumerable fresh mounds that would exist next time forced itself upon the mind, together with the still sadder thought that thousands of the "first fruits" of American manhood would lie in foreign burial places—friend and foe returning to earth in common sepulchers—unknown save to the eye of the watchful Father.

The day, in keeping with the spirit of the time, was observed at St. Joe with the usual ceremonies and, in addition, with a flag raising and patriotic speech.

Appropriate exercises were held at Widney opera house, beginning at 1:30 p. m. Here, the following program was carried out: Song, "America," audience; invocation, Rev. Mumma; song, "To the Flag;" reading of the governor's proclamation, J. P. Buckingham, chairman; address, Rev. Coons; song, "God Bless Our Land."

From the opera house, the march to Riverside cemetery was in the following order: Soldiers, headed by Harry Shuff and Lloyd Miller, who wear Uncle Sam's uniform, and Nick Funk, who served in the Spanish-American war, bearing the flag, and followed by four veterans of the civil war (Florence Buchanan, Benjamin Hamilton and Henry and J. M. Milliman); children, a pretty sight; fraternal orders; citizens. Grover Curie, who served a term in the United States navy, was marshal of the day.

At the cemetery, a committee of little girls, led by Benjamin Hamilton, decorated the soldiers' graves, laying a beautiful wreath upon each one.

The procession then reformed and marched to the town hall, and here Old Glory was run to the top of the flag staff on the fire tower. The honor of raising the Stars and Stripes was given to five men who wore the blue in the early 60's—the four old soldiers mentioned above and William Brown. National airs were sung; the flag was saluted, Mr. Funk setting the example; and Rev. Spayd delivered an address.

The speaker began by telling what the flag symbolizes. The white stands for purity and right motives; the blue, for determination to enforce the right; the red, the price the nation is willing to pay. America, he said, would engage in no war in defense of a wrong cause; but in defense of a righteous cause, is willing to hazard everything. He cited the Spanish-American war as an evidence of this. The United States set the world an example by taking up arms for an unselfish purpose, that purpose being to relieve Cuba from the tyranny of Spain. America, he claimed has entered the present war with no selfish purpose. She is in it to establish a great principle, the unrestricted right of neutral nations to the high seas. He closed with an appeal to the patriotism of his hearers.

REV. COONS' ADDRESS

The principal address of the day was made by Rev. Coons at the opera house, delivered before the march to the opera house. The reverend gentleman first reviewed the causes that led up to the civil war and the appaling price the nation paid in expiating the sin of human slavery; and, in so doing, he paid a tribute to the heroism of the union soldiers and to the sacrifices of the northern people, particularly the women.

The speaker next gave the benefits that resulted from the war. Foremost among these was the

Happenings of the World Tersely Told

U. S.—Teutonic War News

It was announced in Washington that enlistments for the army Thursday broke all records, when 2,367 men were enrolled. The total enlistments since April 1 have now reached 92,686 men.

• • •

London says that the American sailing ship Dirigo has been sunk by a German submarine. The crew has been landed with the exception of John Ray, third mate, who was drowned when the small boats were being launched.

The Brazilian senate voted authorizing alliance of Brazil with "other states to defend the American republics against the world."

President Wilson's outline of the position of this government as to the object of the war will be made public at Washington upon receipt of an acknowledgment by Ambassador Francis at Petrograd that he has a copy of the document.

The American schooner Margaret B. Rouss was sunk by a submarine near the French-Italian coast and the crew robbed by the Germans, according to Capt. Fred L. Foot, master of the schooner, who arrived at an American port from France.

President Wilson, speaking at Memorial exercises in Arlington cemetery, declared the time had come for action by this nation and that he had no fear of the part America would play in the great world war. "In the providence of God," he said, "America once more has an opportunity to show the world that she was born to serve mankind."

Washington

Owners of automobiles, except those used exclusively for business, must pay a war revenue tax on the machine, no matter what its value. The senate finance committee at Washington fixed this graduated tax and wrote it into the pending revenue bill: Cars listed at $500 or under, $7.50; all cars over $3,000, a flat tax of $25.

The senate finance committee at Washington decided to provide in the war tax bill to raise $80,000,000 by consumption taxes of two cents a pound on coffee, five cents on tea, one-half cent on sugar and three cents on cocoa. Another important change agreed upon was the elimination of the present tax of 12½ per cent on war munitions, now raising $25,000,000. Substitutes for tea and coffee also will be taxed.

• • •

Hoarding, storage or destruction of food, fuel or other necessaries of life to limit supply or affect prices would be a felony under an amendment to the government's first food bill adopted in the senate at Washington without a record vote.

A motion to recommit the espionage bill with instructions to strike out the press censorship section was carried in the house at Washington by a vote of 184 to 144.

Another fundamental change in the war tax bill was agreed upon unanimously by the senate committee at Washington, which decided to strike out the whole section levying $200,000,000 by a general tariff increase of 10 per cent on an ad valorem basis. As a substitute the committee proposes direct excise, or consumption taxes, on sugar, tea, coffee and cocoa.

Every federal agency throughout the country has been ordered to attend and report on any anti-registration meeting that may be held. Attorney General Gregory at Washington has determined that vigorous prosecutions shall follow in every instance where such meetings develop disloyalty in speech or action.

Without a roll call, the Lever bill for a food survey was passed by the house at Washington. The bill allows the secretary of agriculture to spend $14,522,000 for a food survey and stimulation of production.

• • •

Domestic

In Wall street it was unofficially announced that subscriptions to the Liberty loan now aggregate $1,450,000,000.

"CARRY ON"

By Strickland Gillilan.

You are one of a whole lot of people in this country, my friend. You may say, "There are plenty of others to handle this war loan." Suppose everybody said that!

This country would be overwhelmed and the war for civilization and the American idea (which is the idea of all the righteous peoples of all the world whatever their audible language may be) would be lost.

You are doing your "bit" for the country just as actually by helping supply the "sinews of war" for the Allied cause, as if you were fighting in the trench and hitting a Hun every pop. You are helping put strength, in the form of food, into the soldier, and helping keep life-sustaining clothing on their bodies. You send your perfectly callous and fearless dollars across to do your fighting for you.

Besides that, even from the standpoint of frugality and thrift it is a wise investment. Many people have long preferred government bonds, in spite of their comparatively low rate of interest, because of their unquestioned safety.

If this war should not be won by the Allies (and remember America is a part of the Entente Allied forces now! We are no longer bystanders!) any money you have hid out in an old sock or in a rifled or bombarded bank wouldn't be worth any more than old Confederate or shinplaster currency is now—we should have no country to sustain the value of our present currency.

So, send out such money as you can spare to help maintain the value and integrity of the other money you have or can get; or, which is infinitely finer and decenter, to help make everybody's money worth its full face value!

Biggest and best of all, remember that the dollars invested in liberty bonds are fighting the battles of all that is desirable in human society and civilization.

I'm chucking all I can get into these very bonds.

U. S. DIPLOMATS ARRIVE IN RUSSIA

State Department Makes Public Safe Arrival of American Commission.

THE TRIP WAS UNEVENTFUL

Commission Left Washington About May 15th With Instructions to Pledge Unstinted Aid from United States.

Washington, June 4.—Safe arrival at a Russian port of the American commission to Russia, headed by Elihu Root, ambassador extraordinary, was announced here in a dispatch to the naval department yesterday.

The commission left Washington about May 15, charged with greetings to the new democratic government of Russia and authorized to pledged unstinted aid from the United States not only in the prosecution of the war against the common enemy but in the rehabilitation of the democratized country. It was headed by a special mission of railroad experts whose arrival already has been announced.

After a final conference between President Wilson and Mr. Root the commissioners traveled overland to the Pacific coast and there boarded a fast naval vessel for the voyage to the orient. Under the voluntary censorship at the request of the government nearly all American newspapers refrained from publishing anything about their departure or the points through which they passed along the way. While no German submarines are known to be operating in the Pacific, it was deemed wise to print no details of the trip until the party was safely landed. The reception of the party at Petrograd is awaiting anxiously, because it is confidently believed that the assurances it brings from the American government and the people and the counsel of its members will do much toward steadying and strengthening the hand of the provisional government.

With Mr. Root are John R. Mott, Cyrus McCormick, Samuel Kerton, James Duncan and Charles Edward Russell, envoys extraordinary; Maj.-Gen. Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff of the army, military representative of the president; Rear Admiral James H. Glennon, naval representative of the president; Col. R. E. L. Michie, aide to the chief of staff; Col. William V. Judson, military attache to the diplomatic mission; Lieutenant Col. T. Bentley Mott, military aide to the ambassador extraordinary; Surgeon Holton C. Curl, U. S. N.; Lieutenant, Alva D. Barnhard, U. S. N., aide to Admiral Glennon; James McKenna, chief clerk and disbursing officer of the mission; Claude S. Stillwell, James F. O'Rourke, Jay Keegan, Duane E. Washburn, Walter W. King and George D. Gregory, clerks; Sergeant Paul Z. Randolph, orderly, and George E. Long, messenger.

Charles R. Crane, envoy extraordinary; Basil Miles, secretary to the mission; Major Stanley Washburn, U. S. A., assistant secretary to the mission, and F. Eugene Prince, civil aide and interpreter, already are in Russia and will join the party at its destination.

Nine Bodies Taken from Mine.

Cairo, Ill., June 4.—Nine bodies have been recovered from a mine at Herrin, Ill., where they were entombed by an explosion Saturday. Two injured miners were rescued and are in a critical condition.

Reports that sixteen men were entombed proved false, as the five reported missing have been accounted for.

It is supposed that the workmen entered abandoned workings where there was gas.

Famous Southern Surgeon Dies.

Louisville, Ky., June 4.—Dr. Thomas Palmer Seatter White, aged 82, long one of the foremost surgeons of the south, and a former president of the American Medical association, died of paralysis yesterday at his home here. He had made his home in Louisville most of his life. He was elected president of the American Medical association in 1885. Surviving him is one son and two daughters.

Wabash to Test Law Fixing Rates.

Socialists in Stockholm.

Stockholm, June 4.—The German majority socialists, headed by Philip Scheideman, who are to take part in socialist conferences here, arrived in Stockholm yesterday. They were accompanied by M. Stauning, the Danish socialist minister without portfolio.

STATE ORGANIZES FOR WAR BOND SALE

Plans for Vigorous Campaign to Be Made in Every County of the State.

LIST OF COUNTY CHAIRMEN

Forces Will Center Efforts to Get Every Citizen to Subscribe to the Limit of Their Financial Ability.

Indianapolis.—General organization of the Liberty loan compaign in Indiana was completed by the appointment of a chairman in every county of the state included in the Seventh federal reserve district, and the opening of state and city headquarters in Indianapolis. The names of the chairmen were received from the Seventh reserve district headquarters in Chicago.

It is planned that these chairmen shall organize their respective counties and report daily to the central organization here through Indianapolis banks, the subscriptions to the Liberty loan. While the subscriptions announced include many by correspondents throughout the state, the bulk of the amounts are subscribed in Indianapolis. The larger amounts to date are: The Fletcher American National bank and the Fletcher Savings and Trust company, $2,000,000; the Indiana National bank and the Union Trust company, $2,000,000; the Merchants' National bank and the Indiana Trust company, $1,000,000; the Meyer-Kiser bank, $250,000; J. Catlin, Warsaw; LaGrange county, Leon Rose, LaGrange; Lake county, Harry M. Johnson, Hammond; Laporte county, Frank J. Pitner, Laporte; Madison county, Jesse Vermillion and Neel McCullongs, Anderson; Miami county, R. A. Edwards and C. M. Charters, Peru; Monroe county, R. O. Pike, Bloomington; Montgomery county, Charles Goodbar, Crawfordsville; Morgan county, Karl Nutter, Martinsville; Newton county, Warren T. McCray, Kentland; Noble county, A. M. Jacobs, Kendallville; Owen county, J. B. Bryan, Spencer; Parke county, A. H. Starke, Rockville; Porter county, W. H. Gardner, Valparaiso; Pulaski county, William Huddleston, Winamac; Putnam county, R. L. O'Hair, Greencastle; Randolph county, J. E. Henshaw, Winchester; Ripley county, John A. Hillenbrandt, Batesville; Rush county, Earl Payne, Rushville; Shelby county, Harry DePres, Shelbyville; Starke county, E. W. Shilling, Knox; Steuben county, E. T. Croxton, Angola; St. Joseph county, Rome Stephenson, South Bend; Tipton county, F. E. Davis, Tipton; Tippecanoe county, N. G. Goode, Cecil Fowler, Lafayette; Union county, Charles Johnson, Liberty; Vermillion county, H. V. Nixon, Newport; Vigo county, James Royse, Terre Haute; Wabash county, Charles Haas, Wabash; Warren county, John Ridenour, Williamsport; Wayne county, Edgar Hiatt, Richmond; Wells county, Ralph Todd, Bluffton; White county, Bert Van Voorst, Monticello; Whitley county, Thomas L. Hildebrand, Columbia City.

A Conservation Association.

An organization to be known as the Conservation Association of Indiana, was perfected by representatives of the fire insurance underwriters and large grain companies of the state. The purpose of the new organization, which will work in connection with the state council of defense, is to mobilize the inspection forces of the companies, with a view to aiding the state in inspecting food depositories and eliminating fire hazards near such places.

The executive committee of the new association is composed of W. H. Riker, chairman; C. A. McOtter, W. P. Ray, B. J. Gilmore, John Helleckson, A. E. Webb, H. C. Upham and R. G. McCullough.

Masons Pledge Loyalty.

The ninety-second annual session of the Indiana grand lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, closed with the installation of new officers and the completion of the routine business. Alba L. Branigin of Franklin was chosen grand master for the coming year. He succeeds Harry B. Tuthill of Michigan City. In response to action of the grand lodge, Harry B. Tuthill, grand master, sent a telegram to President Wilson, pledging the support of the Masonic members of the state in the struggle which this nation is making.

Defense Councils in Counties.

At the meeting of the state council of defense at the state house plans were completed for the organization of a council of defense in each county of the state. The judge of each judicial circuit will receive power to appoint the members of the councils.

A special committee composed of Isaac D. Strauss of Ligonier, William J. Freeman of Terre Haute, and A. E. Reynolds of Crawfordsville, reported the following plan of organization, which was adopted:

"That the state council of defense vest in the judge of the county circuit court authority and request him to appoint a purely nonpolitical county council of defense in each county in his circuit, which council shall co-operate in connection with and under the advice of the state council of defense, all members of said county council of defense to serve without compensation. The said county council shall consist of seven members, one of which shall be a woman and one a representative of labor, all of which seven members shall be unquestionably patriotic and in sympathy with the purposes of the national and state councils of defense.

In the County Seat.

"The headquarters of offices shall be located in the county seat, a room or space for this purpose shall be designated by the said judge. Meetings shall be held at least once a month and as often in the interim as the council may determine or whenever the chairman may issue a call; the date and hour for the regular meeting shall be determined by the said county defense council. The said council shall effect its own organization.

"Reports of the activities of the county defense council shall be forwarded to the secretary of the state council of defense at Indianapolis, following each meeting. Any number shall constitute a quorum. The county circuit judge shall have full authority and power to fill vacancies or to remove from the said council any member that he may deem unsuitable for any cause."

Regular Wednesday Meetings.

The state council decided to meet each week on Wednesday at 10:30 a. m. The next meeting, however, will be held on the call of Will H. Hays, the chairman of the council.

Mr. Hays announced that Governor Goodrich had received a telegram from Herbert C. Hoover, who will have charge of the food control activities for the United States government, asking the governor's co-operation in Indiana with the food control plans.

Mr. Hoover's telegram said that it is his idea to decentralize the food administration work into the state administrations at every point possible, particularly as to distinguishing local problems from interstate problems.

The governor's reply to the message is as follows:

"In reference to your telegram, you may depend on our fullest assistance and co-operation. We have a state council of defense into which all activities are being co-ordinated. Our food committee has been active for sometime furthering food production, conservation and distribution. Advise your wishes."

To Elect Comstcok's Successor.

Arrangements for holding a Republican convention in the Sixth district for the purpose of choosing a Republican candidate for successor to Daniel W. Comstock, congressman, who died recently, were to be made at a meeting of the Republican state committee held at the Hotel Severin.

The Democratic state committee met in the afternoon at the Denison hotel, on the call of Bernard Korby, state chairman, and it was expected arrangements would be made for holding a Democratic nomination convention.

A proclamation to the sheriff of each county in the Sixth district was issued by Governor James P. Goodrich, announcing Tuesday, June 26, as the date for the special election.

The Republican state committee recommended to the district committee Saturday, June 2, or Monday, June 4, for the date for the choice of delegates to the convention, and set June 6 as the date for the district nominating convention.

Method of Choosing.

Delegates will be chosen by mass conventions in the precincts and townships, and the representation will be based on the vote cast at the last election for the first Republican elector, one delegate being allowed to each 200 votes or fraction thereof.

This would give each county in the district the following representation in the district convention: Hancock, 2,188 votes, 11 delegates; Henry, 4,386, 22 delegates; Fayette, 2,360 votes, 12 delegates; Shelby, 3,201 votes 16 delegates; Franklin, 1,496 votes, 7 delegates; Union, 997 votes, 5 delegates, and Wayne, 6,112 votes, 31 delegates.

The convention will consist of 119 delegates, and 60 votes will be necessary for a choice. Wayne county will have more than one-fourth of the delegates.

War Work for Club Women.

Home influences with which Indiana clubwomen may surround the soldiers in training at Fort Benjamin Harrison were outlined by James Edward Rogers, representing the war department commission on training camp activities, at a meeting of the home subcommittee of the war recreation committee, at the committee's headquarters, 1016 Merchants Bank building, Indianapolis. Mr. Rogers designated in all five different departments of activity which fell under the work of the committee named.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

WEYMAN, THE NATURALIST, AND HENRI, THE HUNTER, MAKE THE STRANGE DISCOVERY THAT A DOG AND A BLIND WOLF ARE MATES—THEY MARVEL

Fearing dire punishment after killing a man who attacks his mistress, Kazan, an Alaskan dog, one-quarter wolf, takes to wild life and mates with Gray Wolf. Weeks later, drawn by memory of woman's kindness, Kazan saves the life of Joan and her baby, and with Gray Wolf establishes a lair on Sun Rock, near Joan's home. Gray Wolf is blinded and her pups are killed by a lynx. Joan, her husband and her baby leave the country, so Kazan and Gray Wolf go northward.

Weyman was with him when they struck fresh signs of lynx. There was a great windfall ten or fifteen feet high, and in one place the logs had formed a sort of cavern, with almost solid walls on three sides. The snow was beaten down by tracks, and the fur of rabbit was scattered about. Henri was jubilant.

"We got heem—sure!" he said.

He built the bait-house, set a trap and looked about him shrewdly. Then he explained his scheme to Weyman. If the lynx was caught, and the two wolves came to destroy it, the fight would take place in that shelter under the windfall, and the marauders would have to pass through the opening. So Henri set five smaller traps, concealing them skillfully under leaves and moss and snow, and all were far enough away from the bait-house so that the trapped lynx could not spring them in his struggles.

"When they fight, wolf jump this way an' that—an' sure get in," said Henri. "He miss one, two, t'ree—but he sure get in trap somewhere."

That same morning a light snow fell, making the work more complete, for it covered up all footprints and buried the telltale scent of man. That night Kazan and Gray Wolf passed within a hundred feet of the windfall, and Gray Wolf's keen scent detected something strange and disquieting in the air. She informed Kazan by pressing her shoulder against his, and they swung off at right angles, keeping to windward of the trap-line.

For two days and three cold starlit nights nothing happened at the windfall. Henri understood, and explained to Weyman. The lynx was a hunter, like himself, and also had its hunt-line, which it covered about once a week. On the fifth night the lynx returned, went to the windfall, was lured straight to the bait, and the sharp-toothed steel trap closed relentlessly over its right hindfoot. Kazan and Gray Wolf were traveling a quarter of a mile deeper in the forest when they heard the clanking of the steel chain as the lynx fought to free itself. Ten minutes later they stood in the door of the windfall cavern.

It was a white clear night, so filled with brilliant stars that Henri himself could have hunted by the light of them. The lynx had exhausted itself, and lay crouched on its belly as Kazan and Gray Wolf appeared. As usual, Gray Wolf held back while Kazan began the battle. In the first or second of these fights on the trap-line, Kazan would probably have been disemboweled or had his jugular vein cut open, had the fierce cats been free. They were more than his match in open fight, though the biggest of them fell ten pounds under his weight. Chance had saved him on the Sun Rock. Gray Wolf and the porcupine had both added to the defeat of the lynx on the sand-bar. And along Henri's hunting line it was the trap that was his ally. Even with his enemy thus shackled he took bigger chances than ever with the lynx under the windfall.

The cat was an old warrior, six or seven years old. His claws were an inch and a quarter long, and curved like scimitars. His forefeet and his left hindfoot were free, and as Kazan advanced, he drew back, so that the trap-chain was slack under his body. Here Kazan could not follow his old tactics of circling about his trapped foe, until it had become tangled in the chain, or had so shortened and twisted it that there was no chance for a leap. He had to attack face to face, and suddenly he lunged in. They met shoulder to shoulder. Kazan's fangs snapped at the other's throat, and missed. Before he could strike again, the lynx flung out its free hindfoot, and even Gray Wolf heard the ripping sound that it made. With a snarl Kazan was flung back, his shoulder torn to the bone.

Then it was that one of Henri's hidden traps saved him from a second attack—and death. Steel jaws snapped over one of his forefeet, and when he leaped, the chain stopped him. Once or twice before, blind Gray Wolf had leaped in, when she knew that Kazan was in great danger. For an instant she forgot her caution now, and as she heard Kazan's snarl of pain, she sprang in under the windfall. Five traps Henri had hidden in the space in front of the bait-house, and Gray Wolf's feet found two of these. She fell on her side, snapping and snarling. In his struggles Kazan sprang the remaining two traps. One of them missed. The fifth, and last, caught him by a hindfoot.

Henri and Weyman were out early. When they struck off the main line toward the windfall, Henri pointed to the tracks of Kazan and Gray Wolf, and his dark face lighted up with pleasure and excitement. When they reached the shelter under the mass of fallen timber, both stood speechless for a moment, astounded by what they saw. Even Henri had seen nothing like this before—two wolves and a lynx, all in traps, and almost within reach of one another's fangs. But surprise could not long delay the business of Henri's hunter's instinct. The wolves lay first in his path, and he was raising his rifle to put a steel-capped bullet through the base of Kazan's brain, when Weyman caught him eagerly by the arm.

"Wait!" he cried. "It's not a wolf. It's a dog!"

Henri lowered his rifle, staring at the collar. Weyman's eyes shot to Gray Wolf. She was facing them, snarling, her white fangs bared to the foes she could not see. Her blind eyes were closed. Where there should have been eyes there was only hair, and an exclamation broke from Weyman's lips.

"Look!" he commanded of Henri. "What in the name of heaven—"

"One is dog—wild dog that has run to the wolves," said Henri. "And the other is—wolf."

"And blind!" gasped Weyman.

"Oui, blind, m'sieur," added Henri, falling partly into French in his amazement. He was raising his rifle again. Weyman seized it firmly.

"Don't kill them, Henri," he said. "Give them to me—alive. Figure up the value of the lynx they have destroyed, and add to that the wolf bounty, and I will pay. Alive, they are worth to me a great deal. Heavens, a dog—and a blind wolf—mates!"

He still held Henri's rifle, and Henri was staring at him, as if he did not yet quite understand.

Weyman continued speaking, his eyes and face blazing.

"A dog—and a blind wolf—mates!" he repeated. "It is wonderful, Henri. Down there, they will say I have gone beyond reason, when my book comes out. But I shall have proof. I shall take twenty photographs here, before you kill the lynx. I shall keep the dog and the wolf alive. And I shall pay you, Henri, a hundred dollars apiece for the two. May I have them?"

Henri nodded. He held his rifle in readiness, while Weyman unpacked his camera and got to work. Snarling fangs greeted the click of the camera-shutter—the fangs of wolf and lynx. But Kazan lay cringing, not through fear, but because he still recognized the mastery of man.

Henri shot the lynx, and when Kazan understood this, he tore at the end of his trap-chains and snarled at the writhing body of his forest enemy. By means of a pole and a babiche noose, Kazan was brought out from under the windfall and taken to Henri's cabin. The two men then returned with a thick sack and more babiche, and blind Gray Wolf, still fettered by the traps, was made prisoner. All the rest of that day Weyman and Henri worked to build a stout cage of saplings, and when it was finished, the two prisoners were placed in it.

Before the dog was put in with Gray Wolf, Weyman closely examined the worn and tooth-marked collar about his neck.

On the brass plate he found engraved the one word, "Kazan," and with a strange thrill made note of it in his diary.

After this Weyman often remained at the cabin when Henri went out on the trap-line. After the second day he dared to put his hand between the sapling bars and touch Kazan, and the next day Kazan accepted a piece of raw moose meat from his hand. But at his approach, Gray Wolf would always hide under the pile of balsam in the corner of their prison. The instinct of generations and perhaps of centuries had taught her that man was her deadliest enemy. And yet, this man did not hurt her, and Kazan was not afraid of him. She was frightened at first; then puzzled, and a growing curiosity followed that. Occasionally, after the third day, she would thrust her blind face out of the balsam and sniff the air when Weyman was at the cage, making friends with Kazan. But she would not eat. Weyman noted that, and each day he tempted her with the choicest morsels of deer and moose fat. Five days—six—seven passed, and she had not taken a mouthful. Weyman could count her ribs.

"She die," Henri told him on the seventh night. "She starve before she eat in that cage. She want the forest, the wild kill, the fresh blood. She two—t'ree year old—too old to make civilize."

Henri went to bed at the usual hour, but Weyman was troubled, and sat up late. Midnight came.

He rose, opened the door softly, and went out. Instinctively his eyes turned westward. The sky was a blaze of stars. In their light he could see the cage, and he stood, watching and listening. A sound came to him. It was Gray Wolf gnawing at the sapling bars of her prison. A moment later there came a low sobbing whine, and he knew that it was Kazan crying for his freedom.

Leaning against the side of the cabin was an ax. Weyman seized it, and his lips smiled silently. He moved toward the cage. A dozen blows, and two of the sapling bars were knocked out. Then Weyman drew back. Gray Wolf found the opening first, and she slipped out into the starlight like a shadow. But she did not flee. Out in the open space she waited for Kazan, and for a moment the two stood there, looking at the cabin. Then they set off into freedom, Gray Wolf's shoulder at Kazan's flank.

In the swamp Kazan and Gray Wolf found a home under a windfall. It was a small, comfortable nest, shut in entirely from the snow and wind. Gray Wolf took possession of it immediately. She flattened herself out on her belly, and panted to show Kazan her contentment and satisfaction. Kazan kept close at her side. A vision came to him, unreal and dreamlike, of that wonderful night under the stars—ages and ages ago, it seemed—when he had fought the leader of the wolf-pack, and young Gray Wolf had crept to his side after his victory and had given herself to him for mate.

The hair had now begun to grow over Gray Wolf's sightless eyes. She had ceased to grieve, to rub her eyes with her paws, to whine for the sunlight, the golden moon and the stars. Slowly she began to forget that she had ever seen those things. She could not run more swiftly at Kazan's flank. Scent and hearing had become wonderfully keen. She could wind a caribou two miles distant, and the presence of man she could pick up at an even greater distance. On a still night she had heard the splash of a trout half a mile away. And as these two things—scent and hearing—became more and more developed in her, those same senses became less active in Kazan.

He began to depend upon Gray Wolf. She would point out the hiding place of a partridge fifty yards from their trail. In their hunts she became the leader—until game was found. And as Kazan learned to trust to her in the hunt, so he began just as instinctively to heed her warnings. If Gray Wolf reasoned, it was to the effect that without Kazan she would die. She had tried hard now and then to catch a partridge or a rabbit, but she had always failed. Kazan meant life to her. And—if she reasoned—it was to make herself indispensable to her mate.

It was her habit, spring, summer and winter, to snuggle close to Kazan and lie with her beautiful head resting on his neck or back. If Kazan snarled at her she did not snap back, but slunk down as though struck a blow. With her warm tongue she would lick the long hair between Kazan's toes. For days after he had run a sliver in his paw she nursed his foot. Blindness had made Kazan absolutely necessary to her existence—and now, in a different way, she became more and more necessary to Kazan. They were happy in their swamp home. There was plenty of small game about them. Rarely did they go beyond the limits of the swamp to hunt.

Once more ill fortune comes to Kazan and Gray Wolf—they come into contact with brutal men, those of the mining country in the Northwest. Read of important developments in the next installment.

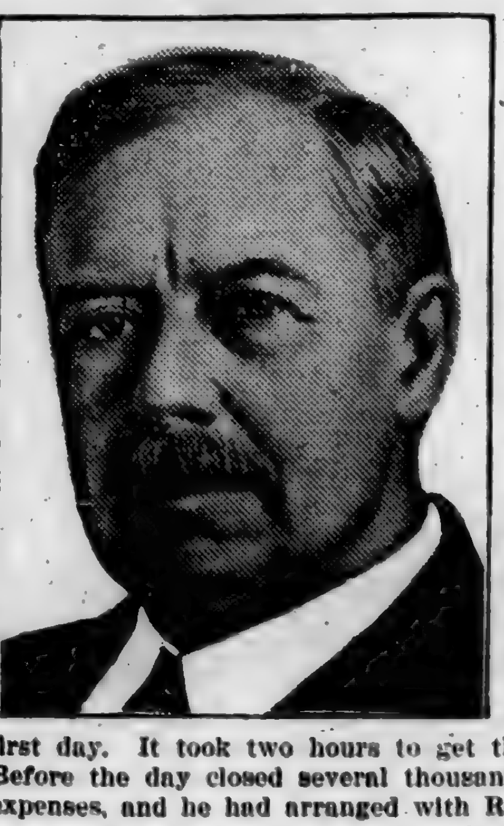
For Use in His Church?

A clergyman is the inventor of a light bar to be held against the upper lip by clamps fastened in the nostrils to prevent snoring.—Houston Post.

SUSTAINS REPUTATION AS HUSTLER



If the following is not the record for quick action, it certainly is a notable performance. A few days ago Mr. Howard H. Gross of Chicago, who is carrying on with great success the campaign for universal military training, took a day off to help agriculture.

While in Washington, a prominent official asked him if it was not possible in some way to get help to the farmers immediately to assist in planting and cultivating the spring crops.

Within 24 hours after reaching home Mr. Gross put his plan in operation. He secured from the board of education an order releasing nearly 6,000 high school boys and permitting them to substitute in place of their regular school duties work upon the farms, for which they will be given full credit.

The boys were enthusiastic and nearly 1,600 of them registered the first day. It took two hours to get this action by the board of education. Before the day closed several thousand dollars had been subscribed toward expenses, and he had arranged with Rotary clubs throughout the country to co-operate in a campaign to secure the release of other boys in the respective cities where these organizations are located and help to bring the boys and he farmers together.

A dozen of our larger cities have already adopted the Chicago plan, and the probabilities are that 20,000 or more boys will be given farm work in substitution for school work. This is surely a big job to put over between sunrise and sunset.

HEAD OF GENERAL NAVY BOARD

"What has come to him, he has won by hard work always."

This is what the navy department thinks of Admiral William Shepherd Benson, chief of naval operations, president of the general board of the navy and the one man, above all others, upon whom rests the success or failure of the fleet.

When congress recently wrote into the law that Admiral Benson's orders "were to be considered as emanating from the secretary of the navy and have full force and effect as such," it showed what it thought of him.

The chief of operations is truly a Southern gentleman. He was born on a small plantation in the heart of Georgia in 1855, and has carried with him throughout his brilliant career the best traditions of the old South.

Tall, spare, with a most courtly bearing and a full, white mustache, much like his predecessor, Admiral Dewey, the admiral presents the most distinguished appearance. His rise has been meteoric during the last few years.

His first cruise as captain of a battleship was in 1913, when he piloted the Utah to the fleet pennant. He then assumed command of the Philadelphia navy yard, where he did "his bit" with such "great labor and excellence" as to be called to Washington in 1915 when a man was sought to create and take charge of the now vital office of naval operations.

ADMIRAL TELLS OF CITIES' PERILS

The peril that threatens New York city because the United States lacks adequate aerial defense is a peril that will soon theaten every inland city in America, said Admiral Peary in a recent interview. Chicago, for instance, with its wealth and importance as a transportation and manufacturing center, will soon be scarcely more secure from enemy attack by air than New York, Washington or any other of our coast cities.

At the present time foreign powers, probably six, have the men, the machines, the experience and the expert knowledge that would enable them by issuing an order today to destroy New York city or Washington or any other of our great coastal cities from the air in a single night two weeks from now.

In the very near future in a few hours more they could shower death and destruction upon any one of our inland centers, such as Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, St. Louis, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Kansas City and even far-off Denver.

The United States has neither airplanes nor dirigibles nor aviators nor anti-aircraft guns nor any other means of preventing such destruction.

Interesting Convention

The quarterly Sunday school convention of Concord township was held Sunday afternoon at the M. P. church, and was presided over by the vice president, J. P. Buckingham, at 2 p. m. The opening song, "Sunshine in the Soul," was followed by prayer by Rev. Coons and by song, "What a Day of Victory." Devotionals were led by Mrs. Retta Hathaway, who read eleven verses of the 15th chapter of St. John; prayer, Mrs. Amanda Spayd; song, "You May Have Joy Bells."

Mrs. Hattie Draggoo gave a very interesting talk on "Some of the Obstacles We Have to Fight in Sunday School." She said the Sunday school should be made interesting. She thought amusements and pleasure trips kept many away. Parents should see that children learn lessons at home. Officers should be on time.

M. T. Bishop led the discussion. He thought that indifference and selfishness were hindrances to Sunday school work. Many others took part in the discussion, and many good points were brought out. The president ended the discussion by saying he studied the scholars and learned their habits and won them through these.

John Milliman opened the discussion, "I Can and I Can't in the Sunday School," in a carefully prepared paper. Mrs. John Knight led the discussion. She said: "If you are an 'I can't' worker, study the Bible more and prepare a better Sunday school lesson. In conclusion, she quoted Paul: 'I can do all things through Christ.'"

"Why Should the Young People Be in the Sunday School and How Can We Keep Them There?" was very ably discussed by Rev. J. C. Coons, who said he could not remember the time when he was not in Sunday school, except when the church he attended was quarantined. Mr. Neiswander and others joined in the discussion.

The departmental reports followed. The superintendents of the Cradle Roll, Adult, Temperance, Missionary and Secondary departments were absent. The last sent his report, which showed twelve organized classes in the Secondary division. Mrs. S. W. Tustison reported thirteen organized classes in the Elementary department. Mrs. B S. Sheffer had nothing new to report. Dr. Sheffer reported three teachers' training classes.

The following officers were elected: President, J. P. Buckingham; vice president, John George; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Ada Bassett.

The secretary-treasurer's report showed a balance of $9.28 in the treasury, from which the price of programs is to be deducted.

Good music formed an interesting part of the program.

The next convention will be held on the first Sunday of September at Concord.

The Culture Club

The Culture club program committee met last Thursday with Mrs. William Pepple and made out a program for the 1917-18 club year. The text book will be "Home Life of Great Authors," by Griswold, with book reviews additional. The following officers will serve:

President.—Mrs. Esther Bowman.
Vice President.—Mrs. Maud Jenkins.
Secretary.—Mrs. Rose Farnham.
Treasurer.—Mrs. Mary Buchanan.
Critic.—Mrs. Amanda Spayd.
Press Correspondent.—Mrs. Nora Kinsey.
Parliamentarian.—Mrs. Frank Wiers.

Three Valuable Cattle

On Monday, D. L. Carpenter sold three head of Scotch Top short horn cattle—two cows and a heifer—the product of his stock farm. The purchaser was Charles Hartung, of Huntertown; consideration, $725. This goes to prove the profit of blooded stock raising, and shows why the progressive farmer is taking such a prominent part in public affairs. Such men as Messrs. Carpenter and Hartung are raising agriculture to the dignity of a profession—the ranking profession, too.

Two Horses Were Killed

The St. Joe fire department was called to the home of Harry Jones, a mile north of town on the Henry Maxwell farm, Tuesday evening. The fire was extinguished before the department got there, through the efforts of Tom White and Mr. Jones. Two horses were killed by the lightening which caused the fire.

He Enlists In Navy

One more St. Joe boy, Paul F. Krabill, has answered his country's call. He enlisted at Fort Wayne on Monday, tendering his services in the capacity where he could do the most good, that of wireless telegrapher, for which he is well fitted. He reported at Fort Thomas, Kentucky, on Tuesday.

Seventy-One Registered

The total registration of Concord township was 71, divided as follows: West, 47; East, 24. This far exceedes previous estimates. Rolla Wiers was the first to register in the west precinct, and Floyd Ridgaway in the east.

CLASSIFYING MEN OF UNITED STATES FOR DRAFT

Census Bureau of the Government Finds That 5,372,400 are Single and That 4,545,900 are Married.

By a census bureau estimate classifying the more than ten million men within the military draft age limit, the number of single men is placed at 5,372,400 and the number of married men at 4,545,900.

The estimate was prepared on a basis of a normal increase in population since the 1910 census and on the assumption that the ratio between married and single men is the same as at that time.

The classifications by chief occupations is given as follows:

Agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry, 2,864,000.
Manufacturing and mechanical industries, 3,034,000.
No gainful occupations, 500,000.
Transportation, 967,000.
Trade, 1,054,000.
Public service, 144,000.
Domestic and personal service, 441,000.
Professional service, 335,000.
Clerical occupations, 374,000.
Extraction of minerals, 364,000.

The government, it has been stated, will not exempt any particular classes of industry from conscription, but will deal with cases individually. Individuals, however, whose work is considered necessary to preserve an economic balance, will be exempted.

Nearly every line of industry, it is said, has appealed to the war department for exemption for its workers. Some few classifications are not included in the figures.

DAY COACHES TO BE USED TO TRANSPORT TROOPS

It is announced by the secretary of war that standard Pullman and tourist sleepers will not be used for the transportation of troops under ordinary conditions during the war. Day coaches hereafter will be used on the basis of one officer to each double seat and three men to each two double seats. The new order applies to all cases except journeys of unusual length, covering more than one night and one day, which cases will be separately considered when they arise.

It is explained that the new regulation is necessary owing to the limited number of sleeping cars available for troop movements and to the congestion that would arise on transportation lines if sleepers had to be collected for every large movement of troops. Moreover, by doing away with sleepers, it is declared, the number of cars necessary to handle the movement is decreased by one-quarter.

PROTECT PRACTICE OF DOCTORS ENTERING ARMY

In recognition of the patriotism of its members, who may be called into active war service by the government, the Indianapolis Medical society has passed resolutions recommending that one-third of all fees collected for professional work, done by physicians who remain in Marion county during the war, from families who were formerly served by physicians in active service of the government, be turned over to the absent physician on his return or to his family during his absence.

The resolutions also urge the patients of physicians who are called into service to recognize the physician's patriotism by summoning him, after his return, when they are in need of medical service. The society has 336 members and at least fifty of them are expected to be called soon and a number of others expect to be called later.

SEVEN GARRETT SHOPMEN VOLUNTEER TO GO TO FRANCE

Seven Garrett shopmen have volunteered to go to France in the shop regiments to be sent from the United States to France to repair railroad equipment. The recruits will be sent to Philadelphia for examination prior to joining the forces which will go abroad.

The regiments which are being recruited from among the mechanical forces of the railroads will be sent to the repair shops back of the battle front. They will be drilled and will be furnished uniforms and also rifles for defense. The Baltimore & Ohio will endeavor to secure the enlistment of 250 mechanics as its quota.

The seven who have volunteered to go from the Garrett shops are: Ora Bennett, E. Strause, E. A. Cisman, J. M. Dugger, O. Crane, F. N. Steinmets and E. L. Bapst.

The funeral of "Grandma" Dunten, held at Huntertown Sunday forenoon, was largely attended. She had raised a large family of boys and they in turn married and had children. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Saylor, at Huntertown, Friday. Services Sunday were held in the Unitarian church at Huntertown.

Believing that physical training of high school students is of more than ordinary importance in these days of war, the Fort Wayne school board is planning to expend $15,000 in the construction of a high school gymnasium.

Another girl student at Fort Wayne has taken sick with smallpox and a quarantine has been placed on the Bloomingdale school in that city. No child will be allowed to enter the school until a certificate for vaccination is presented.

In order to increase food production, the prosecutor of Henry county, has announced that farmers working on Sunday will not be prosecuted under the Sunday observance laws.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive gaulds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

A two-course luncheon was served to seventeen members and twenty-five guests.

Excellent Program

A convention of Spencer township Sunday school workers was held at the Lutheran church, Spencerville, Sunday afternoon and evening. Both sessions were well attended and proved both interesting and profitable. Two subjects, "How Can the Superintendent, His Officers and Teachers Become More Effective Soul Winners?" and "Ruts and How to Avoid Them," were on the afternoon program. The first was discussed by Rev. Spayd and was one of the most instructive features of the convention; and the second, in the absence of F. E. Rhodes, to whom it had been assigned, was taken up for general discussion. In the evening, Rev. Emmons delivered a very interesting address on "What Is Sabbath Desecration and How Are People to Be Brought to a Realization of It?" In addition to this, Earl Wyatt, intermediate superintendent, gave a short talk. Both sessions were enlivened by music—vocal and instrumental—and recitations.

Old Resident Gone

Christopher Hursh, one of the pioneers of northeastern Indiana, died at his home in Spencerville at 2 a. m. Monday, death being caused by dropsy, with which he had been afflicted for several years He was about 84 years of age.

Deceased was by occupation a miller, and ran flouring mills at Hurshtown and at Hamilton. For a number of years, he resided on a farm in Spencer township, and later moved to Spencerville.

TRAMP ATTACKS YOUNG GIRL AT HUNTINGTON

When Miss Marie Johnson, aged 15, daughter of Monroe Johnson, a farmer living near Huntington, refused to give food to Ernest Bell, a colored tramp. Bell knocked her senseless with a blow from his fist, entered the house and helped himself to eatables. The girl was alone at the time. As Bell was leaving the Johnson home he noticed that the girl had recovered consciousness enough to get to her feet, and he struck her the second blow.

Miss Johnson was found by her brothers, who spread the alarm, and Bell was soon in custody. The authorities made quick work in sentencing him. A. H. Sapp, prosecuting attorney, visited Bell in the county jail, and advised him that he might escape trouble by pleading guilty. The negro admitted he had struck the girl, and at once pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery with intent to rob. His sentence was from two to fourteen years. He goes to Jeffersonville. Miss Johnson's parents were away at the time of the assault.

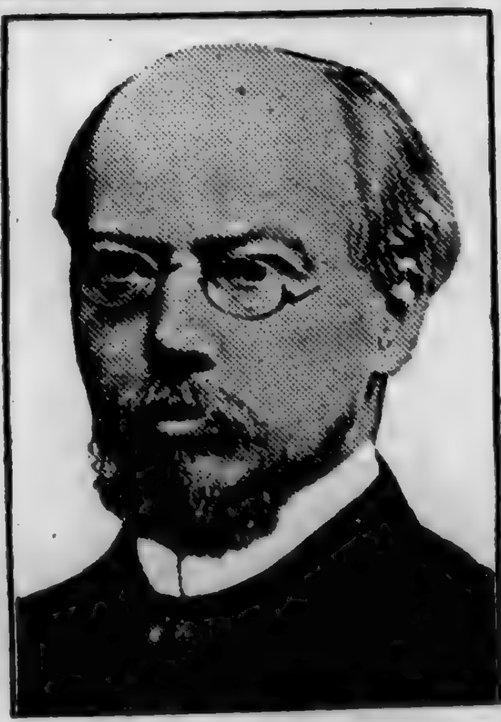
HEADS RED CROSS WAR COUNCIL

To re-enforce the present organization of the American National Red Cross, to broaden the scope of its activities and thereby make it a more efficient instrument in the carrying on of the war to which the country stands committed, President Wilson has created a Red Cross war council and has placed at its head Henry P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Co. The council merely supplements the present organization of the Red Cross.

The organization of the council by Mr. Davison, is now under way. In speaking of its work the distinguished financier says:

"The Red Cross can be not only an agency for the alleviation of suffering on the battlefield, but it can exert a great psychological influence and can increase the man power of the allies. In other words, the re-enforcements of the organization which we have in mind, if supported by the public, will be an important step in winning the war. There is much work to be done. outside of the battlefield. The assistance of the people in the reconquered portion of France should demand our immediate attention. I have been in Europe three times since the war started and have seen conditions first hand. All France is pressed to the very limit in every line of human endeavor. These people have been left with nothing. They are poorly clad; without knives or forks; without farming implements; their fruit trees cut down; their seeds destroyed."

MAY REPLACE BETHMANN-HOLLWEG



A sedate, spectacled old professor, en route from Vienna via Munich, drops his grip, so to speak, in a Berlin hotel. In a jiffy there's a terrible pother. The quidnuncs gossip. The junkers squirm. The peace-cotes flutter. Reventlow howls. Plain to see, the old gentleman's visit, while welcome to some, is distinctly unwelcome to others. But it matters little to him. He has come to the capital with an urgent, important message, and there is enough firmness in his jaw to show you that he intends to see the business through. He's a dogged old party, this fellow, albeit he's seventy-three. So he sits and waits for the storm to settle, wondering the while if, when he goes back to Munich, there'll be another medal in his grip.

The reason why the Count George von Hertling, premier of Bavaria, takes matters so calmly—for the venerable traveling professor is none other than the man who is so persistently mentioned as the probable successor of Von Bethmann-Hollweg as imperial chancellor—is that he holds a very important political card in his hand. It is a card with two kings on it. Hold the card one way and you find before you the young slim ruler of Austria who wants peace quickly and on any safe terms. Turn the card around and you note the adipose king of Bavaria who wants peace also and doesn't see why Bavaria should be made the goat of junkerdom in the arrangement of terms. So Hertling smiles as he fondles the card.

LEAVES CONGRESS FOR ARMY

HARRIS & EWING

Representative Augustus P. Gardner of Massachusetts has resigned from congress to enter the army. Mr. Gardner has been one of the most active figures in the movement for military preparedness and was a member of the ways and means committee. He has been ordered to active duty as a reserve officer. He is the first member of either house to quit congress for military service in the present war.

Mr. Gardner holds the rank of colonel in the Officers' Reserve corps, adjutant general's department, and will report to Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood's headquarters at Charleston, S. C. He was taken in from the old Officers' Reserve corps which enables him to enter active service, although he is over the military age requirements.

The corps having been ordered to duty, it was ruled by the judge advocate general that Mr. Gardner became automatically an officer of the army and could not continue to draw pay as a congressman at the same time.

Several senators and representatives, it was learned, are planning to enlist as bluejackets in the navy when the present session of congress ends. They will go in for the period of the war, to serve during the recess of congress and then determine whether they will resign from congress or get leave of absence from the naval service during the next session.

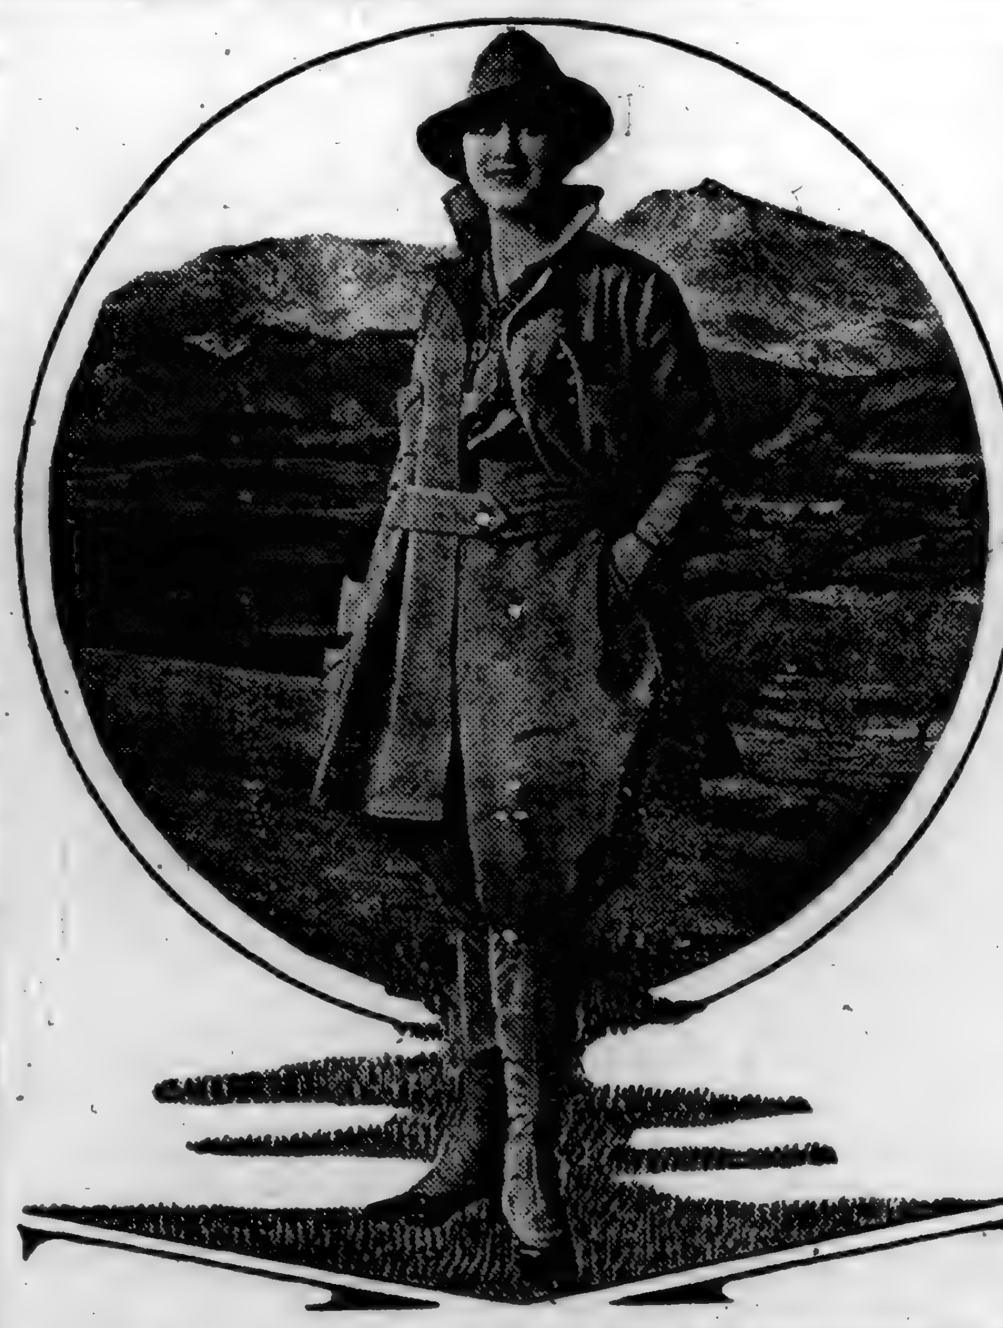
LASHES FOOD PIRATES

Notwithstanding the perils confronting the nation in entering into a war, the duration and horrors of which no one can foretell, the food gamblers and food exploiters are carrying on their nefarious work just as in the days of peace.

The situation is such that it has been given official notice and in words that will long leave a sting Carl Vrooman, assistant secretary of agriculture, assails these food pirates and economic parasites and calls for immediate action to check them. Even a man as conservative as Joseph Leiter, formerly wheat king of Chicago, denounces them and says that the man who today speculates in grain or in any kind of foodstuffs should be hanged from a specially constructed gallows.

"Never in the history of the world," says Secretary Vrooman, "have business men shown as much patriotism and unselfishness as have been manifested since the war began by the business men of America. An overwhelming majority of them have been as ready to place their business organizations and their personal services and their wealth at the disposal of the federal government in this crisis as the young men have been to do the actual fighting.

Spirited Suit for Out-of-Doors Girl



A steady breeze is blowing from a certain quarter in the world of fashions and all weather vanes, in the guise of designers, point one way. Looking in that direction we discover there is no denying that it is trouserward. From several sources new departures in apparel for the out-of-doors woman, have appeared, and she who plays the role is about to dress the part whether for work or play.

Among these new things the "Rocky Mountain Suit" takes its place as the handsomest. It is made for outings and all sorts of sports where skirts might hamper the freedom of the up-to-date woman. It is cut along most graceful and feminine lines, but it has a little spice in its makeup a sort of soldierly dash and spirit. It breathes an atmosphere of rollicking fun in the mountains or woods, afoot or horseback, or at the wheel of the motorcar.

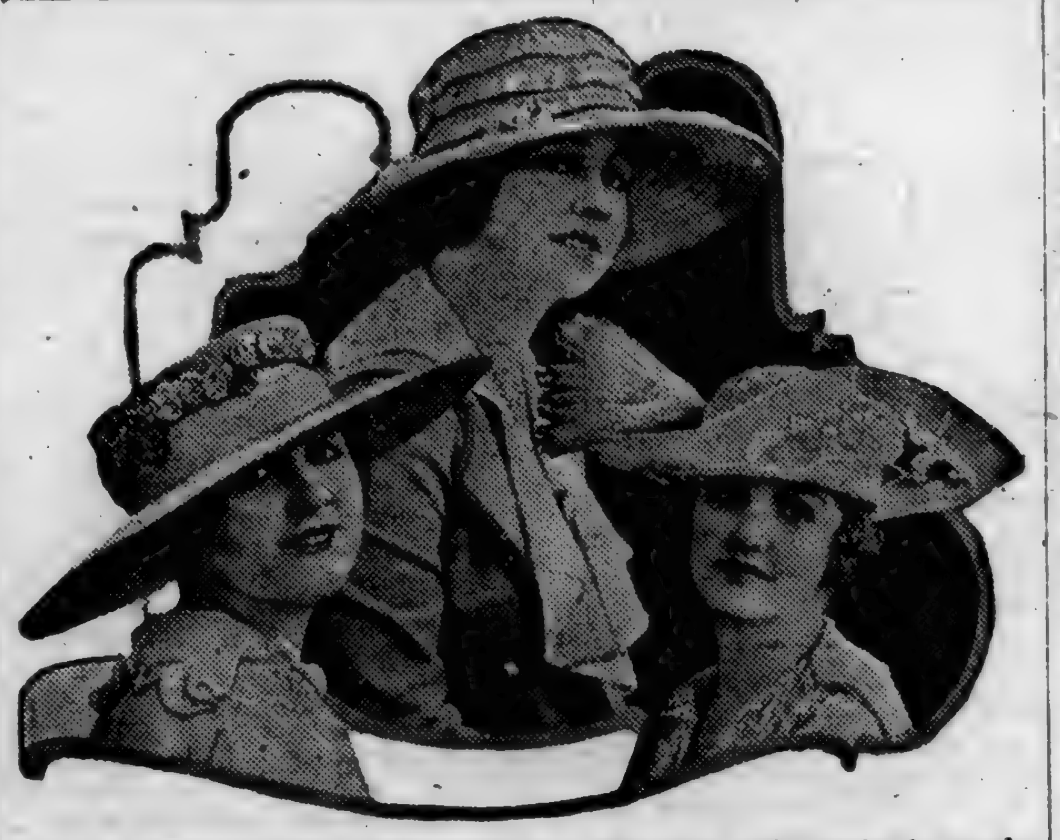
The Rocky Mountain suit will appeal to the woman who loves to hunt and fish and camp out. It is thoroughly practical and is made in khaki or other equally durable material. The trousers and leggings are in one and the coat is shaped much like a riding coat. It has four very practical pockets, a loose, narrow belt and a collar that is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. It may be turned up to keep the sun off the neck, or buttoned up snugly for warmth, or turned down and out of the way altogether. The sleeves are finished with turned-back cuffs and the suit is trim and shapely.

The blouse must be in keeping with the suit, and might be of linene, pongee or light wool, and of all hats, one like that shown in the picture, of soft felt is the best. It is not likely that sportswomen will be the only ones to wear the Rocky Mountain suit. Women whose business in life calls them to manage the farm, keep bees or poultry, may find it practical.

Dimity Frocks for Summer.

In a summer of dress economies the wearing qualities of dimity hold an appeal, and the best designers have experimented with this material as well as with gingham. It is, of course, more sheer and cool than the gingham and lends itself to a daintier type of frock, yet it, too, is best when very simply treated. The dotted designs are particularly good, and there are most likable little line checks and plaids, all of these being preferred to the sprigged designs, which, though quaint and often lovely, do not fit so well into the season's scheme.

About the Hats of Midsummer



If some cool-headed and unimpulsive fair lady has not yet been enticed into buying her midsummer dress hat, she may now look about and make her choice without any misgivings. Fashion approves large hats, medium hats, and moderately small hats. It smiles upon leghorns, fine milans, and hats—in black or white—made of crepe georgette or malines. Fabrics, and fabrics combined with straws, are particularly favored, and only beautiful workmanship has a chance of recognition.

Some of the wide brimmed hats are narrower at the front and back than at the sides, these are called "East and West" hats; there are numbers of flat-brimmed models, classed as "sailors," and broad, slightly drooping brims are noted among body hats more particularly.

The next hat to make its appearance will be the hat for outing wear, and along with it the lingerie hat is scheduled to arrive. This tells the story and thereafter headwear will hint of fall.

A graceful leghorn hat is shown in the picture, having the crown and upper brim ornamented with ruffles of narrow satin ribbon and small clusters of flowers connected by long stems, posed in the upper brim. This is a lovely hat for a young woman. A wide-brimmed sailor, of fine milan has an emplacement of georgette crepe on its top crown, extending part way over the wide crown. A wealth of little flat roses and pansies, covers the line between the crepe and straw. The crepe is a light pink with pansies in purple.

An airy hat in white batiste crown covered with shirred crepe georgette and a brim of malines, turning up at one side. An applique of embroidered batiste and a white fancy feather finishes this very unusual midsummer inspiration.

Julia Bottomley

Sleeveless Wraps.

The fad for sleeveless wraps is chiefly shown in the sports clothes, where sleeveless silk sweaters, sleeveless coats of bright-hued wool velours, sleeveless wool sweaters, sleeveless waistcoats over bodices, etc., are numerous. Elbow-length sleeves multiply as the summer frocks come more and more to the front, but the very short sleeve of certain French models does not appear to have appealed greatly to American fancy.

Transparent Lace Coats Again.

Over a beige satin underdress is a coat which hangs from the shoulders, falling straight and very loose and free from body. This coat is gold and black net. It is elaborately embroidered in gold and is held with a wide girdle. These loose and graceful effects of coat or tunic in transparent net lace or ninon over fitted satin slips are charming for the afternoon or theater.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 10

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

LESSON TEXT—John 19:16-22, 25-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—Christ died for our sins.—I Cor. 15:3.

We are compelled to omit a consideration of that dark, despicable trial in Pilate's judgment hall. Pilate's weak-kneed subservience to custom and the cry of the politician is one of the blackest pages in history. His scourging of the man whom he, himself, declared innocent, is practically without parallel. After the mocking and the scourging, Pilate said unto the people, Behold the man" (v. 5), and later in sarcasm he said to the same people, "Behold your king" (v. 14). Teachers should emphasize at the beginning and all through this lesson that Jesus suffered and died for the sins of all men, ours as well as those of his own day.

I. The Crucifixion of Jesus (vv. 16-22). It was about nine o'clock in the morning when Pilate gave his infamous order that Jesus should be crucified. It was indeed a sorrowful procession which moved itself along the "Via Dolorosa" (the Sorrowful Way), consisting of the Roman soldiers, the tottering, physically exhausted man of Galilee, and, Luke adds, "sorrowing women." They took him to the place of a skull, a hill about sixty feet high, at the foot of which was the rock-hewn sepulcher in which his body was later laid. The place was called in Hebrew "Golgotha," the Aramaic for skull. Calvary is the Latin for the same. On either side of him were crucified the robbers, which was an evident effort to add to his shame as well as a salutary warning to the Passover pilgrims. Over the cross Pilate wrote a title on a wooden tablet. Following the usual custom, this was nailed at the head of Jesus, setting forth his crime. The words it bore were, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews," as though Pilate would take malicious revenge upon the mob which had made him perform a deed he had sought to avoid. Literally this sign meant "This man is the kingliest of all Jews, and see what they have done to him." In response to Pilate's questioning, Jesus said, "I am the King of the Jews." Pilate knew that he was innocent, and sought to let him go free, but, rather than incur the hatred of the Jewish authorities, he yielded to their demand for his blood, and became a party to the murder of the Son of God. Men today take a part in his crucifixion rather than surrender wholly to him, and pay the price of open confession. "They crucified him." How these words laid the pride of men in the dust. Human nature is the same today as it was two thousand years ago when the world's bitterest hate was wreaked not upon a bad man but upon the best man, the perfect man, the God-man. The pain Jesus suffered on Calvary was no imagination. He suffered it all for us (Isa. 53:6), but the physical suffering was not the most severe agony he bore (Ps. 69:20; Matt. 27:46). The crucifixion of Jesus was part of the eternal purposes of God's love and redemption.

II. The World's Darkest Hour (vv. 23-30). Each of the Gospel writers refers to the part the soldiers took in casting lots for his garments. They were unconsciously fulfilling the prophecy of Psalm 22:18, and it was from their number that one of the supreme testimonies to the character of Christ came (See Matt. 27:54). The first three evangelists tell us of the throng of pilgrims who passed along the highway from the north, close at hand, and who wagged their heads in imitation and mockery of the agony of the one who was being crucified. But there were others who were spectators of this event, a group of Christ lovers (v. 25).

"It is finished." These are remarkable words. He had finished his suffering; he had finished that for which he came into the world when he began his ministry; he had finished the mission for which his father had sent him into the world; he had finished and fulfilled the prophecies concerning his suffering and death; he had completed the work of the redemption; the atonement was finished, and Satan's power was finished; the Mosaic law was finished as far as its claims upon the believer were concerned (Rom. 10:4; Col. 2:13; Eph. 2:15 and 16). Outwardly it seemed to be Satan's supreme hour. It was the world's darkest hour.

The seven last words. These would be an interesting study for any class. (1) "Father forgive them for they know not what they do;" (2) "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise."

(3) "Woman, behold thy son; (4) "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (5) "I thirst;" (6) "It is finished;" (7) "Father into thy hands I commit my spirit." Christ had power to lay down his life. He had power to take it up again, but he laid it down, submitting to a burial in the tomb. At that moment note the effect upon the malefactor, upon the centurion, upon the elements of cloud and sky, upon the veil of the temple, upon the people and upon his friends. What is the effect of this story upon yourself, teachers, and upon those who are listening to your instruction?

War and Theology.

Even in the theological seminaries they are cutting courses to meet the conditions imposed by the war.

Rev. Ward G. Meehan, a young priest of the Brookly diocese, was one of the first to offer his services as an army chaplain at the declaration of war, and has been accepted.

He is taking a post-graduate course in theology at the Catholic university in Washington, and he is awaiting his call to active service.

If called before the completion of his course, he will be given his full credit marks, just as if they have been given to the students in the secular colleges when they have sacrificed the closing days of their college year to their sense of obligation to national duty.

FOUR WEEKS IN HOSPITAL

No Relief—Mrs. Brown Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"For years I suffered so sometimes it seemed as though I could not stand it any longer. It was all in my lower organs. At times I could hardly walk, for if I stepped on a little stone I would almost faint. One day I did faint and my husband was sent for and the doctor came. I was taken to the hospital and stayed four weeks but when I came home I would faint just the same and had the same pains.

A friend who is a nurse asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it that very day for I was suffering a great deal. It has already done me more good than the hospital. To anyone who is suffering as I was my advice is to stop in the first drug-store and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before you go home."—Mrs. W. C. HAUNTED RIFLE IN TRENCHES

German Gun, Captured in Abandoned Dugout, Brings Trouble to New Owner, the Latter Believes.

An officer in the European trenches writes:

I have heard many ill omens applied to certain towns or villages. There is one on the tower Albert, for instance; while certain dugouts are always unlucky. It is a bad omen in some parts of the line to stumble over a grave.

During the late offensive a certain young officer found in a captured trench a German sniper's rifle with two small ivory disks set into the stock. He kept it in his dugout, intending to take it back to billets when they vacated the trench. One morning he brought it out in the trench to clean, and Fritz thereupon started strafing, so that he had to retire again to his dugout. Next day the same thing happened, and whenever he brought the rifle out of the dugout shells would begin to come over. Finally the thing got so on his nerves that he refused to let anyone touch the rifle. It is probably still in the dugout, for it is certain that the legend was handed on to the next occupants.

Fearful Prospect.

"I prophesy that everything you plant this year is going to come up."

"Don't say that. I might have to bury my mother-in-law."

It sometimes happens that a woman does a thing the way she wants to—unless her husband expects her to do it that way.

A Wise Move is to change from coffee to POSTUM before the harm is done.

"There's a Reason"

THE COLONIAL TWO FAMILY HOUSE NOW

This Type Becoming Popular in Small Cities and Towns All Over the Country.

HELP TO COMMUNITY LOOKS

Double House Described Here Gives Complete Privacy to Each Family and There's Plenty of Room Space in Both Sides.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

When the growth of towns and small cities is discussed with reference to building activity, sooner or later the multi-family house will be mentioned. It is natural to associate the flat or apartment building with a thickly-settled community, the type being, at first thought, one of necessity rather than preference. It cannot be doubted, however, that there are conveniences in apartment life which appeal to many people. An example of the eagerness with which apartment rentals are taken up is found in a recent occurrence in a city of about 60,000 population in northern Illinois. This city, despite its size, has very few apartment buildings. Last year one of the real estate firms announced its intention to build a modern 12-apartment building on a very well located piece of land, nine blocks from the center of the main business district. Rentals varied from $45 to $65 per month. Before a shovel of dirt had been turned the firm had signed leases for every inch of space in the building.

Many cities considerably smaller than this one have numerous apartment buildings which have proved to be satisfactory investments to their owners. These buildings are expensive to build and their construction is seldom attempted unless the investor is safe in assuming that the demand for them exists. For this reason, the apartment building is a product of thickly settled communities.

The flat building precedes the apartment with respect to the growth of the municipality for the reason that it is cheaper to maintain. In the flat building the renter provides his own heat, while in the apartment, janitor service is provided by the owner. This, of course, increases the rent which must be asked for the apartments. Some people, living in small cities or towns, do not care for the conventional flat building in which each floor is occupied by a separate family. For this reason, there is nearly always a demand for two-family houses in which both families occupy ground floor space, or in which the two-story building is divided after the manner of the duplex apartment, each family having space on two floors.

It would seem logical to suppose that a building of this kind would be popular in almost any small city or town, even in rather small towns, in case there is any demand for houses to rent. This type of double house may be made very artistic, as the example which we will presently describe will show. There is an independence in the two parts of such a building which compares very favorably with private houses built on the average lots of growing communities. A few of these houses in a well-kept town are impressive and give the appearance of progressiveness which is always noticed by strangers, especially those who have in mind the investment of their capital in industrial or other business projects.

Perhaps the greatest value of this type of double house in the small town is found when two branches of a family occupy the opposite sides. By sharing in the expense of construction, each family obtains a home which is considerably better from every standpoint than either could build alone for the same amount. This type of house of necessity requires a wide lot, which makes its use more or less limited in cities where land values are high. On the other hand, the wide lot, when it can be obtained for a reasonable amount, is one of the real virtues of the home. It offers the possibility of utilizing nature's decorations, and, what is more important at this time, it gives the residents an opportunity to grow at least a part of the vegetables required for their tables.

The accompanying perspective view and floor plan is sufficient to adequately establish the beauty and convenience which may be obtained in this double-house type. The basic virtue is found in the arrangement of the house as a whole. The floor plan shows that a U-shape is followed in the general layout. By this means the two parts of the house are sufficiently separated to provide for privacy and lack of disturbing transmission of sound from one part to the other of the house. This arrangement also facilitates the ventilation of bedrooms which face on the court.

The beauty of the exterior is plainly evident. Walls are finished with shingles having a wide exposure to the weather. The roof design is distinctive, following somewhat after the lines of the English thatched effect. This roof could be made even more effective by the use of the Americanized thatch-effect roof construction now being introduced by leading manufacturers of stained wood shingles and composition shingles. The colonial influence is found in the design of windows and in the shutters. An effective method of finishing this house would be to stain the walls pure white and paint the shutters green.

There are several features of the interior of this design which should be noticed. The arrangement is symmetrical about the center line of the house. There is a large living room, dining room and kitchen with pantry along the outer part of each side of the house, from front to back. Two bedrooms and a screened porch form the inner part of each side of the house, facing the center court. The front porch is built under the main roof of the house and is used by both families. Small reception halls at the ends of this porch form the entrance to the two living rooms.

Attention is called to the connecting bedroom and screened porch arrangement. This combination is designed for those who recognise the wisdom in open air sleeping but who do not care to undergo the discomfort of dressing in a cold room during the cold weather. The sleeping porch is entirely open on one side and has a window in the opposite wall, so that ventilation is certain. The bedroom may be used, then, simply as a dressing room and may be kept warm for that purpose. French doors are placed between the bedroom and porch and small windows are placed on each side of the doors, in the full length of the doors. Although this bedroom has no windows in an outside wall, there is no possibility of its being dark and if the doors are opened between it and the screened porch, the room will be thoroughly ventilated. When the combination is used in the first method suggested, however, this is a most excellent feature.

Everyone will easily recognize the good qualities of a house of this type and, as has been already said, if there were more of these houses carefully built and well taken care of in almost any of the towns in the country, it would result in a very much improved appearance of the communities affected.

Lien of Long Standing.

One English silver penny an acre each year since the days of William Penn has been discovered to be standing as a lien against a tract of 79 acres near Media, Pa. The penny a year was a ground rent provided for by Penn in the grant of the property in 1685. The county court has been asked to dissolve the lien.

Temperance Notes

ALCOHOL AND THE SOLDIER.

Does the use of alcohol prevent a man from being a good soldier? Sir Thomas Anderson Stuart, dean of the medical faculty in Sydney, Australia, thinks that this question is a most pertinent one, and that it is the angle from which nations today should discuss the drink problem. He says that alcohol does prevent a man from being a good soldier and that military men and scientists have proved it. We quote:

"Alcohol is subversive of discipline, and robs a man of his prudence, judgment, conscientiousness and higher morality. The development of the human brain took countless years, but alcohol works a change quickly, and brings a man to the level of a beast in a few minutes. Alcohol has also had a great influence on the sexual passion, and the diseases which result are the shame and bane of the military authorities.

"I have seen 499 men in one day in one place. They all came from one military camp, and alcohol was the indirect cause of all their misery. When one man asks another, 'What is your poison?' he does not know how correctly in a scientific sense he is speaking."

OUTLOOK FOR DISTILLERS.

Mida's Criterion, leading spokespaper of the whisky and wine trade, very sensibly tells the distillers that a prohibition future does not look so dark after all—and incidentally deals a blow to the compensation plea. We are glad to pass on this optimistic view, because once assure the distillers that they will lose no money through prohibition and we shall hear no more from them about "personal liberty." Says Mida's:

"In the next five years there will be an average of not under 5,000,000 motor cars in the United States. With eight miles to the gallon for fuel and 32 miles average per day would equal four gallons of fuel per day per car, or 20,000,000 gallons per day total, with a total of 7,000,000,000 gallons per year. Add to this 500,000 motor trucks averaging 10 gallons per day, we would have 1,750,000,000 gallons more, or a total of 8,750,000,000 gallons of fuel for the year. This would certainly tax the capacity of every distillery in the land, and, besides, denatured alcohol for fuel does not require a $1.10 per gallon tax from the government."

BEER AND WINE.

Alcoholized blood starves and taints the brain cells and allied nervous system. Psychic brain cells bathed in toxined blood do not give safety and logical surety to the movements of the mind. Alcoholics should be classed with the other poisons and their use as beverages discarded. Medical men have had testimony from laboratory, hospital, and fatal family pathologic lineage and sequence testimony against alcohol as an unsafe drink, forceful for harm beyond former estimate. Even in their mildest forms of dilution, as in wines, beers, and ales, alcoholics are not fit for the family table, the social club, or the public bar.—Dr. Charles F. Hughes, Editor of the Alienist and Neurologist.

"PERSONAL LIBERTY."

When Billy Sunday was conducting meetings in Milwaukee, he, according to custom, sent invitations to the large department stores and other industrial concerns to be present on special evenings. Inasmuch as Mr. Sunday always has something forceful to say concerning the liquor traffic, the brewers expressed their disapproval of the whole proceeding by asking Milwaukee business houses to forbid their employees attending the meetings. A manager of one of the department stores thought this too good to keep to himself. He had copies of the letter printed and on the reverse side an urgent invitation to the meetings, with comment on the brewers' particular brand of "personal liberty."

STRANGE UPRISING.

"A preacher said to me: 'Isn't it strange—this mighty uprising against the liquor evil?' I replied: 'The only strange thing about it is that any decent man, in view of what he has seen, should have hesitated to destroy it.' I resent the fact that my father and grandfather did not have sense and conscience enough to do it before I was born, so that I could have gone about my Father's business."

ANTICIPATING DRY DISTRICT.

The National Capital brewery of Washington, in anticipation of a dry district, is preparing to convert its beer factory into an ice cream establishment.

BETTER JOBS FOR SALOONMEN.

More workingmen lose their jobs because saloons are open than would be the case were the saloons to be closed. When liquor puts a man out of a job it unfits him for another job. When no-license puts a bartender out of a job it makes him a wealth-producing workingman. It is better that the bartender should lose his job and get a better one than that dozens of the poor unfortunate patrons of the saloon should lose their jobs and be unfitted to fill any job if they were able to secure one.

In Great Demand.

Movie actors whose physical make-up resembles some of the great characters in American history are in great demand because nearly all the moving picture companies are making patriotic films. Recently three men came out of the Metro office on Broadway, and their appearances were so impressive that all the squabs and busy actors not only gave them the once over, but stopped and looked at them. One of the men bore a striking resemblance to Abraham Lincoln. Another was almost the image of the Father of His County—at least he looked as George Washington might have looked if he hadn't looked the way he did. A third member of the little group was a "ringer" for Roosevelt. These "doubles" pull down a salary as big as the stars, it is said. The reason why they come so high is there are only a few of 'em who can enact Washington, Lincoln and Wilson.—New York Herald.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Forgot the Umbrella.

One of Chauncey Mitchell Depew's best stories is the story of the spotted dog, which as a boy he bought from a local dog dealer. "The next morning it was raining," he says, "and I took the dog out into the woods, but the rain was too much for him. It washed the spots off. I trotted the dog back to the dealer.

"'Look at this animal,' I said. 'The spots have all 'washed off.'

"'Great guns, boy!' he replied, 'there was an umbrella went with that dog. Didn't you get the umbrella?'"

New Language in Making.

A new language is in the making in France, where the French and English troops have developed a peculiar language, known only to themselves, which answers all their common needs. The words nonplus the official interpreters, but an English soldier with no French at all can ask a French soldier with no English at all for virtually anything he wants—and gets it.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

From Bibles to Guns.

War brings many curious changes. A few months ago the American Bible society sent to Panama a fine power boat, the Goodwill, for the use of its new Bible house there in supplying Bibles to the vessels that pass through the canal. Now the boat, mounting a gun, is in the government patrol service.—Youth's Companion.

Took and Gave Father's Advice.

Father—Tommy, go out to the barn and hitch the horse to the old sleigh.

Son—Why not the new sleigh, father?

Father—Wear out the old first, is my motto, son.

Son—Well, then, father, you go out and hitch up the horse.—Everybody's.

If you wish to please people, you must begin by understanding them.—Charles Reade.

is open to you—to every farmer or farmer's son who is anxious to establish for himself a happy home and prosperity. Canada's hearty invitation this year is more attractive than ever. Wheat is much higher but her fertile farm land just as cheap, and in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

160 Acre Homesteads Are Actually Free to Settlers and Other Land Sold at from $15 to $20 per Acre

The great demand for Canadian Wheat will keep up the price. Where a farmer can get near $2 for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre he is bound to make money — that's what you can expect in Western Canada. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming in Western Canada is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising.

The excellent grasses, full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent. uniting of the states into a nation by the elimination of slavery, the issue that had divided the north from the south. Prior to 1861, the nations of Europe did not understand the United States: they regarded the republic as an experiment and prophesied that it could not endure a great crisis. After the war, they understood this country no better: they did not think the south would remain loyal should a second crisis arise. "The south," "was only waiting to show its loyalty to the flag of our united country, and this opportunity came when the United States rose up in defense of oppressed Cuba. Here the blue and the gray were dissolved and were blended together in the universal khaki."

Referring to the war in which we are now engaged, Rev. Coons said: "Because our country has been baptized by fire and blood in the name of liberty, its right has become fully established to become the champion of world freedom. Though we are a peace-loving people and have a peace-loving president, the challenge of autocracy, represented by the Prussian system, against justice and humanity could not go unheeded.

"As we meet today, a peculiar solemnity hovers over us, for we are under the cloud of another war. It is not of our own choosing; but by the very force of the circumstances that has made us a leader of the nations, it is but natural that we should be looked to to champion the principles of our national ideals."

After mentioning some of the sacrafices that this war would requirre, the speaker closed with the following eulogy to the old soldiers: "As we strew flowers over the graves of our dead, let us cherish their memory and learn to love the flag for which they gave their lives and hand it down to our posterity as the emblem of a freer, purer and better country than our forefathers gave us.

"There sleeps today in the bosom of mother earth no nobler soldiery than those whose memory we this day cherish. Were we to dream of erecting a single monument to their memory, who could select the place for it or compute the height of the shaft that would do justice to its purpose?

"I would select the peak of the highest mountain for its base, and therefrom I would build a shaft that would pierce the clouds and stand bathed in eternal sunshine; and I would inscribe upon it in honor of our hero dead: 'These died that our government of the people, for the people and by the people might not perish from the earth!'"

St. Joe Valley Bank

The St. Joe Valley bank, of this place, is one of the solid financial institutions of northern Indiana. Solidity does not depend upon the volume of business done, but upon the conservatism and business principles upon which it is managed; and this bank always has been conducted with a view to "safety first," which insures it the confidence of the public. The resources of the bank now total $137,649.02; but resources are not everything: stability is what counts. A bank's business may run into nine figures, and it may be insolvent.

The St. Joe Valley benk is the successor of a private institution organized in 1889 by J. D. Leighty, president; E. Case, vice president; and W. C. Patterson, cashier. After the death of Mr. Leighty, in 1912, Mr. Case became the head. In 1913, an organization under a state charter was effected, with a capital of $25,000. The officers are: President, E. Case; vice president, H. L. Dunkle; cashier, S. W. Tustison; assistant cashier, F. R. Bowman.

COMMENCEMENT

OF THE EIGHTH GRADE ON AUBURN, JUNE 20

One hundred and ninety-six eighth grade pupils of DeKalb county are entitled to receive certificates of graduation this year.

This announcement has just been made by County Superintendent Lida Leasure, who has just completed the work of grading the manuscripts from the last of the three examinations held.

The number falls nearly fifty short of last year's record, two hundred and forty-five having been graduated from the eighth grade of the county in 1916.

Wilmington township heads the list in number with 25 graduates, with Fairfield and Franklin townships close seconds with 21. Smithfield has 17; Richland 13; Keyser 14; Union 13; Concord 12; Spencer 10; Jackson 9; Troy 8; Newville 8; Grant 7; Stafford 6; Butler 2; Altona 5; and Corunna 5.

The joint commencement will be held in this city on Wednesday, June 20. The exercises for the day will be held in the Court theater and will consist of both forenoon and afternoon programs.

The forenoon program will be a voluntary contribution by members of the graduating class and in the afternoon, Albert Stump of Chicago University will be the speaker. The diplomas will also be presented at the afternoon session.

Honor Roll.

The honor roll as taken from the examination which includes all who have made an average of 90% or over, is as follows:

Ethel Button, Altona and Percival Pepper, Stafford township, each 95 6-9.

Harold Weihmuller, West Richland township, 95 1-9, Jay Olinger, teacher.

Walter Beerbower, Spencer township, 95, Mark Shull, teacher.

Clara Schlosser, Smithfield township, 93 7-9, Mabel Bair, teacher.

Kathryn Shull, Concord township, 93 2-9, Merritt Maxwell, teacher.

Elva Quinn, Altona, John Nugen, teacher, and Clara Tuttle, Corunna, Ethel Brand, teacher, each 93.

Mary Koch, Newville township.

Enlist in This County

Company K is DeKalb county's only military organisation for the war. Why swell the contingent of some other state? Why not enlist at home and let Indiana get the credit?

Don't wait to be made a conscript and then be placed in any organisation, with new officers and strangers to you; but enlist now and get in with the home boys and with officers that are well trained for the service. All enlistments are for the war only; and as soon as the war is over, you will be discharged. Congress has increased the pay of the enlisted man so that a second class private will get $30 per month. An extra effort is being made to recruit Company K to war strength this week, and you should be one of the number.

The government calls for you and asks that you volunteer. The country needs you, and the boys of Company K want you to become one of their number. So why should you wait to be drafted? Better be a volunteer. The armory will be open every night this week and next. We want 150 men in the company by June 8. Enlist now and be a volunteer. Registration will not affect you if you volunteer.

An Ordinance

Prohibiting the storage, sale, discharge or firing of fire-works and other pyrotechnic display, providing penalties for the violation of the same and repealing all ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the same.

Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the Town of St. Joe, Indiana:

Section 1. The discharge, firing or use of all fire crackers, rockets, torpedoes, Roman candles or other fire works or substances designed and intended for pyrotechnic display, and of all pistols, canes, cannons or other appliances using blank cartridges or caps containing chlorate of potash mixture or other explosives is hereby prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana, or within two miles thereof.

Sec. 2. The sale of fire works at retail is prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana.

Sec. 3. The storage or sale of fire works at wholesale is prohibited within the corporate limits of the town of St. Joe, Indiana.

Sec. 4. Any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this ordinance as regards the storage and sale of fire works shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not less than ten ($10) dollars nor more than twenty-five ($25) dollars for each day's failure of compliance. Provided also, that violations of other sections of this ordinance shall be considered a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding ten ($10) dollars.

Sec. 5. The chief of fire department may, at his discretion, remove or have removed, at the owner's expense, all stocks of fire works or other combustibles exposed for sale or held in stock in violation of this ordinance.

Sec. 6. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Sec. 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

The above ordinance was passed at the urgent request of Governor Goodrich and State Fire Marshal Friedley, and its enforcement means a safe and sane Fourth. The time has gone by when patriotism can be expressed without endangering life and property. If the damage were confined to the person creating the same, it would not be so bad; but an innocent person is nearly always the sufferer.

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 14 1917 NO. 24

Them Lights Is "Bum"

Where was Jonah when the lights went out?
Where was he and what was he about?
Out upon the land,
Scrambling o'er the sand—
There was Jonah when the lights went out.

His name was Jonah, and he stopped his horse before a modest brick structure in Hicksville—the Ohio city that stands in the same relation to eastern DeKalb county towns by night that the sun does by day. Or, is supposed to, but doesn't—except, when the electric lights are working, which is some of the time.

Within the modest brick structure, a machine was humming—a machine upon which danced little blue lights that suggested the hot bye-and-bye that awaits the unregenerate (not much more tormenting than St. Joe by night). There were also a boy and a man. The boy was doing nothing and the man was equally busy.

"Trippin' along like a little lady," said the boy, nodding at the machine. "Been runnin' fer fifteen minutes. Runs fer ten more, she'll break the record."

"Y-a-a-s," drawled the man.

"Hey!" yelled Jonah from without.

"Hey!" came the answer from within. A second later, the boy appeared, followed by the man.

"Can you direct me to Spencerville?" inquired Jonah, directing the question at the older one.

"Y-a-a-s," replied the man, taking a hitch at his overalls, a rite he performed before entering into conversation. Then he proceeded to drawl out the way to Spencerville. He reached St. Joe, when he stopped to remonstrate with his overalls; but before he got them adjusted to his liking, the boy, who had been fidgeting around, cut in:

"Take it from me, mister, ye'll have no trouble after landin' in little ole St. Joe. Some burg that when the 'twinkle, twinkle, little star' is out. Don't need no diamonds in the sky to see by. Got our 'lectric lights. I'm handin' it to ye straight—we got Ole Sol lookin' like Darktown at midnight."

"Pretty good people over that way?" inquired Jonah.

"Y-a-a-s," replied the man.

"Some class, b'lieve me," added the boy. "Never beef on 'lectric light bills."

"Well, I must be joggin' along," remarked Jonah. "Much obliged for your information. Giddap!"

"Y-a-a-s," responded the man.

"Hi, mister," yelled the boy, cupping his hands before his mouth to make his voice carry up to the retreating vehicle. "When ye git to St. Joe, turn south at the last ro-oad!"

Jonah turned and waved his buggy whip. This answered a double purpose—acknowledged the receipt of the boy's information and reminded the horse that he was soldiering on the job. Result No. 1, a decided increase in the visible supply of dust in that immediate vicinity; result No. 2, the head of Widney avenue, St. Joe, twenty minutes sooner than he otherwise would have done. Here, Jonah met a Native. Wondrous to relate, the electric lights seemed to deem it a privilege to banish darkness from every nook and cranny of the town. In the language of the governor of Wisconsin, they "seen their duty and done it." The Native was carrying of all things— What?

Yes, a lighted lantern!

"Hullo!" says the Native.

Jonah replied not. Disgust and amusement struggled within him. Disgust landed a knock-out blow. "I never believed that story about Balaam's ass talking to him," he grunted; "but I do now: I have actually heard an ass talk. Walking in a well lighted town and carrying a lantern! The fool!"

And then—the lights went out!

"Oh! I dunno," chuckled Jonah, "seems to be a pretty wise old head, after all. Mebee, if my name was Balaam and that horse was a long-eared critter, he'd make a few remarks reflecting on my previousness. Well, I'd better be moving on. Let's see, that boy at Hicksville told me to go south, didn't he? Yes, that's right. But, I do declare, I forget which road he told me to take. Well, here's a road going south; and if it doesn't take me to Spencerville, it will take me somewhere else. Giddap!"

For three blocks, Jonah had no trouble keeping in the middle of the road, being guided by the lights in the houses along the way. Beyond that, darkness reigned—that peculiar stygian, enveloping, inky-ink darkness that hovers in, around and over St. Joe, isolating it from everything but the temptation to swear. Jonah groped on until—

Something Happened!

Had he jumped from an airship and forgotten "safety first" in the shape of a parachute, or—

Jonah never decided. Next moment he found himself at the bottom of a steep hill, an integral part of a chaotic mass of man, horse and buggy. He separated himself from the rest of the debris and tried to get his bearings. Vain effort! He was so confused by the shaking up he had received that he could not tell the way he had come down and double-distilled, compressed darkness was between him and all objects. There was nothing to do but FEEL his way out. He felt for about ten minutes, and then—

KERPLUNK!

A sudden swish followed and there was commotion in the water

TAKE THE LOAN

EDWARD EVERETT HALE

WRITTEN IN MAY, 1861

Come, freemen of the land,
Come, meet the great demand,
True heart and open hand,
Take the loan!
For the hopes the prophets saw,
For the swords your brothers draw,
For liberty and the law,
Take the loan!

Ye ladies of the land,
As ye love the gallant band
Who have drawn a soldier's brand,
Take the loan!
Who would bring them what she could,
Who would give the soldier food,
Who would staunch her brother's blood,
Take the loan!

All who saw her hosts pass by,
All who joined the parting cry
When we bade them do or die,
Take the loan!
As ye wished their triumph then,
As ye hope to meet again
And to meet their gaze as men,
Take the loan!

Who would press the great appeal
Of our ranks of serried steel,
Put your shoulder to the wheel.
Take the loan!
That our prayers in truth may rise,
Which we press with streaming eyes
To the Lord of earth and skies,
Take the loan!

FORT THOMAS, Ky., June 5.

DEAR GRANDPA:—

Although I have not received any reply from you to my last letter, I will write you again at this time to inform you that we will leave Fort Thomas on Thursday, June 7. We go to Fort Myers, Va. They say it is only about 14 miles from Washington, D. C. All the field artillery that are being sent from here have been assigned to the 3d field artillery at that post. We are given big blue sacks, with gathering strings at the top, to put our belongings in. They are quite similar to grain sacks, but not quite so large. I think I shall take my suitcase along also, as it may come in handy. We were also given our knapsacks to keep our mess kits and other necessary articles in close at hand. They fasten by a belt over the head and shoulders and hang at the side, being very light in weight.

We were marched down to the commissary department this afternoon and given our "coffee money," which amounted to 21c each. It is provided for the purpose of purchasing coffee on our trip to our new post. We were also subjected to another physical examination today, in order to make sure that nothing of a serious nature had been contracted by any of the bunch since the examination given them upon their arrival here.

All of the boys are very much delighted to think that the time has come when we get our transfer.

This is certainly a rainy place. Had another downpour last night, and there is some mud here every time it rains the least bit, although it soon dries up after it stops raining.

Our trip will take approximately eighteen hours. We will cross Kentucky, West Virginia and Virginia, so I hear. It may be, of course, that we will take a different route; but, at all events, we cross the Blue Ridge mountains and land on the banks of Chesapeake bay. The scenery will certainly be beautiful.

Are you going to do any traveling this summer? It would be mighty nice if you could arrange to pay us a visit while there. We will be stationed there permanently until the call comes to go to Europe, I suppose.

How is everybody? Tell Aunt Bessie I miss being in her Sunday school class. We attended services at the Y. M. C. A. last Sunday evening; and we would have attended the afternoon services also if we had not been detailed on "kitchen duty" and, consequently, could not get off to do so. Next Sunday morning, they begin a Bible class here, but we will be gone by that time; but I am living in hopes that there will be a Y. M. C. A. where we will finally be located. They are the finest thing in the world for the soldier. Citizens of Cincinnati send over candy and lecturers and choirs and other forms of entertainment for the benefit, amusement and education of the boys in the camp.

Yesterday, it is estimated that over 1,100 recruits were brought in here. They are fellows that put off enlisting until the last moment.

There are now in process of construction ten sleeping houses, each more than 150 long and about 35 feet wide, and nine eating houses, which are not quite so large as the others.

I have read a chapter in the Bible every day since being here. Roy and Merwin have done the same. I am surely glad that we three get to keep together, because it is so much easier to be a Christian when one has two companions to back him up; and, let me tell you, there are very few Christians around here. Of all the profane, vulgar, indecent language I have ever heard, I have heard here. Nearly all are cigarette smokers and a large percentage are drinkers, although they dare not get intoxicated after donning a military uniform.

It is now time for the Y. M. C. A. moving picture show to start, so I must close.

Do not send any more mail here, and I will send you my new address as soon as I get located.

Love to all.

Lovingly,
GRAY.

The foregoing is a letter from Gray Woodcox, written to his grandfather, Martin Tustison. The young man's friends in and about St. Joe will be pleased to hear from him and two soldier comrades, Roy Haifley and Merwin Place. Ordinarily, portions of this letter would not be of general interest; but at this time, the boys in khaki are uppermost in public tho't, and any word from one or all of them is eagerly read. Hence, we run the letter in full. This is the second one from Gray that we have run, and we shall be pleased to print more. He has no monopoly on our space, however, and letters from any other soldiers will be gladly received. We hope THE NEWS will be made a means of communication between the boys at the front and their friends at home.

MARRIAGE LICENSES SHOW FALLING OFF IN MAY

Twenty-three marriage licenses were issued during the month of May according to the records in the office of County Clerk W. W. Mountz. The number shows a falling off from the previous month when forty were issued, the largest number in any one single month.

Time Change on the B. & O.

A new time card went into effect on the B. & O. last Sunday; and, with the usual care for the convenience of the small places along the line, the tracks were not taken up, thereby affording the people good footing into and out of town. Heretofore, everyone thought the limit on poor service had been reached, but it seems that was a mistake. The management of the road must have been consulting expert advice on how to retain its charter and give nothing in return.

St. Joe, under the new time card, has one train each way every day except Sunday. The eastbound is due here at 8:27 a. m. It starts at Garrett; and people west of that point—Avilla, for instance—have no means of reaching here except by stopping over night on the way. The westbound is due at 10:35. This train runs through to Chicago. No. 6, due here at 9:56 p. m., stops to let off passengers from Auburn Junction.

Walking the track is about the best means our people have of getting out of town over the B. & O., and it seems a piece of rank injustice to have guards at the river bridge.

By the way, Indianapolis is just as near as ever and the public utilities board just as willing to right wrongs. St Joe should teach the B. & O. another lesson.

Our hay barn is about empty and we are in position to take on a few cars of Hay. C. E. FRY.

MADE MEMBER OF DEFENSE COUNCIL

Governor Goodrich Appoints Frank C. Dailey to the State War Board.

ALSO BECOMES SECRETARY

Takes the Place of Frank Wampler, Resigned—Membership of Council Numbers 19—County Organizations Being Pushed.

Indianapolis.—Frank C. Dailey of Indianapolis was appointed by Governor Goodrich a member of the Indiana council of defense, and also becomes secretary.

In the latter position he succeeds Frank Wampler of Indianapolis, who had been appointed secretary but who has found that his business obligations, particularly the extensive work his company is planning in connection with communications for Fort Benjamin Harrison, made it impossible for him to carry on the arduous duties of the secretary of the state defense council.

Mr. Dailey is a Democrat of the highest standing and is well known to the people of Indiana. Mr. Wampler also is a Democrat. Mr. Wampler also was appointed a member of the council, which brings the membership of that body to 19.

The state council of defense has opened headquarters at the statehouse, under the direction of Will H. Hays, chairman of the council, and work toward amalgamating all the state agencies, which are planning to do the utmost for the nation in the war crisis by Indiana, has begun with a rush.

Committee of Medical Defense.

A state committee of medical defense was organized at a meeting of prominent Indianapolis and Indiana physicians at the University club. Acting on recommendations from Maj. Jefferson R. Kean, U. S. A., director general of the National Red Cross, the former state Red Cross committee of physicians and the former state committee on medical preparedness were combined to form the new committee.

Dr. Joseph R. Eastman, recently returned from service with the American physicians' expedition in Austria, was elected chairman of the new organization, and Dr. Charles H. Combs of Terre Haute was chosen as secretary. A chairman, to act with the state committee in every congressional district in the state, is to be appointed and these men, in turn, are to name county chairmen throughout the state.

The Other Members.

The other members of the state committee of medical defense follow:

Dr. John H. Oliver, president of the State Medical association, Indianapolis; Dr. Charles E. Barnett, Fort Wayne; Dr. Edmund D. Clark, Indianapolis; Dr. S. A. Clark, South Bend; Dr. Willis D. Gatch, Indianapolis; Dr. W. T. Gott, secretary of the state board of medical registration and examination, Crawfordsville; Dean Charles P. Emerson of the Indiana university school of medicine; Dr. George F. Keiper, Lafayette; Dr. Carleton B. McCullough, Indianapolis; Dr. George P. Pfaff, Indianapolis; Dr. Miles F. Porter, Fort Wayne; Dr. S. M. Rice, Terre Haute; Dr. Edwin Walker, Evansville; Maj. George M. Wells, United States army, Indianapolis; Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health commissioner, and the chief surgeon at Fort Benjamin Harrison.

Appeal by Horticultural Society.

Due to unfavorable weather conditions and the war this nation and the world at large are facing a great crop shortage, says a bulletin issued by the Indiana Horticultural society. More people died of starvation in 1916 than in any other year of history. Every effort must be made to prevent a repetition of this calamity in 1917. Our government has entered the war and it now falls to us not only to feed ourselves but to help feed our allies in Europe. This great duty falls on the American farmer.

The agriculturist must furnish concentrates, but it is up to the horticulturist to furnish the bulk or roughage and the materials to make the rations palatable. These crops can be grown either in the garden or as field crops. Every patriotic citizen should plan to grow enough to feed himself and family and provide a small surplus for the general supply to be sent abroad. This can only be done by the proper use of the garden. So plan the garden that the greatest area can be devoted to the storage and canning crops. Plant a minimum of the early maturing and perishable vegetables for immediate consumption. Do not become alarmed because you did not attempt a garden earlier in the season. The majority of the staple food crops should be planted late.

To Preserve Park Beauties.

Regulations to govern the action of visitors and campers in Turkey Run and McCormick's Creek Canyon, state parks, were adopted at a meeting of the state park commissioners. Members of the commission said the co-operation of the public is needed in the strict adherence to the rules in order that the beauties of the park may be preserved. The rules adopted by the commission embrace the following orders: No shooting or hunting in the park; no picking of wild flowers or ferns, no parking of automobiles.

County Councils of Defense.

At the suggestion of Governor Goodrich and the state council of defense, judges of the Indiana courts are selecting local councils of defense whose activities will supplement those of the state and national councils of defense. Immediate response followed the request of Will H. Hays, chairman of the state defense council, to the Indiana jurists and within 24 hours after the call had gone out, five counties had taken up the work, four of them organized and ready for business.

It is expected that there will be considerable patriotic rivalry among the 92 counties of the state in offering effective working organizations to perfect the co-ordination of the state's resources in men and materials for the use of the federal government in the prosecution of the war.

County Organizations.

Following are the complete organizations of county councils reported to Mr. Hays:

Dubois county, Judge John L. Bretz—William S. Hunter, chairman; A. L. Gray, secretary; J. V. Stimson, George P. Wagner, Bromar Traylor, George L. Stein, Mrs. Sarah Cooper.

Fayette county, Judge Raymond Springer—Clarence S. Roots, William E. Brown, L. A. Frazee, Thomas C. Bryson, Mrs. George Cain, Marion Jemison, John L. Doenges.

Franklin county, Judge Raymond S. Springer—Louis Federman, M. P. Hubbard, Will M. Baker, John C. Shirk, Mrs. I. M. Bridgeman, Herman Walthers, John W. Brockman.

Union county, Judge Raymond S. Springer—William P. Kennedy, Charles D. Johnson, George W. Pigman, James Davis, Charles Conner, Elmer E. Post, Mrs. Will Morris.

Judge William E. Deupree of Johnson and Brown counties has nominated Glen Ellis of Franklin chairman for Johnson county and J. W. Street, Nashville, chairman of Brown county. These officials will call meetings June 5 and at that time complete their councils.

At Fort Wayne.

Fort Wayne has organized a council for patriotic service. It includes all civic organizations, commercial, literary, fraternal and religious. The officers are: President, William H. Schieman; vice president, Frank E. Bohn; treasurer, J. Ross McCulloch; secretary, Charles R. Lane. The council stands in readiness to assist the state and municipal authorities and co-operate with the state and national councils for defense in every possible way.

The women of Rochester have organized a patriotic club and will do their bit at home and in places that may be vacated by men selected for the army.

The Laporte committee on national defense, consisting of ten members, meets almost daily for the promotion of the sale of liberty bonds, the encouragement of food production, increasing enlistments and looking after the details of registration.

Business men of Knox have arranged an appropriate patriotic program of music and addresses for registration day. It is expected from 175 to 225 young men of the township will register, and these will be honored in fitting manner.

To Rush Military Road.

Governor Goodrich has written a letter to the Marion county commissioners, approving the plan to improve a three-mile road leading from Millersville to Fort Benjamin Harrison. The commissioners immediately ordered a special meeting of the county council in order to provide money for the work.

The council, it is believed, will be asked to appropriate about $150,000 to build the highway and make other necessary improvements. In the meantime, work will be begun on the road, under the suggestion of the governor, giving the commissioners a start of a week. The road is badly needed, the commissioners say, as a military necessity.

Hear Test Case Soon.

It is hoped to have a thorough test of the constitutional convention act of the last legislature before the election of delegates in September. Judge Thornton of the superior court will soon hear the suit filed to test the law, and the section of the woman suffrage law, allowing women to vote for delegates to the convention. The case then will be carried to the supreme court. The court was asked to expedite matters so that an early decision may be had. Henry Bennett, president of the State Life Insurance company, who filed the suit, asks a permanent injunction against the secretary of state, Ed. Jackson, and others. He asserts the law is unconstitutional because the people gave the legislature no authority to call a convention; that the people in 1913 rejected a proposal to call a convention; the present constitution provides an exclusive method of amending the constitution, and makes other objections. He says the plans to permit women to vote are unconstitutional.

Change Conscription Plans.

City conscription boards to have general authority over the registration of men of military age have been eliminated under the conscription law passed by the congress, and in cities of more than 30,000 persons the mayors receive authority to appoint a board of three members, one member being a physician, for each 30,000 residents, or, if it is thought advisable by the mayor and his counselors a board of three members for each ward in the city may be chosen to direct the work.

CULTIVATE! CULTIVATE!

Produce More Food, But at the Lowest Cost.

A trip through most of the grain growing districts of Western Canada, and information received from authentic sources, reveals that the spring seeding of wheat, barley and oats is finished and the grain is having a most rapid growth. Men of farming experience here say that the conditions are similar to those years when there was an abundant harvest reaped. During the past year a number of new settlers came into the country, and they will undoubtedly have a good crop this year. This added to the normal acreage, made considerably less by the lack of labor owing to the number who have gone to the front, will give a fair general yield. It is surprising the growth that this country is capable of producing.

Wheat has this spring germinated and shown three or four inches growth in five or six days, and with anything like favorable weather, harvesting should commence about the 15th of August, or a little over one hundred days from first seeding. Hundreds of farmers throughout this vast country paid for their entire holdings out of one year's crop and it would not be surprising if the same experience met a great many more this year.

The best authorities on the wheat situation give it as their opinion that for many years to come, wheat prices will be high. They base their opinion on a scientific calculation and their reasoning seems to be sound. Anyway, it is quite evident that for some years to come, the producer of wheat will be amply rewarded for any effort he may make to develop this branch of agricultural industry. Money may be made on the high-priced lands of the wheat-growing districts of the United States, but it is a question if these high-priced lands would not be more profitably employed in other branches of farming than in growing the smaller grains, leaving it to lands just as productive for wheat, less expensive to operate, and with a much smaller initial price, to provide the world with this necessity of life. Here is where Western Canada, with its vast rich fertile plains, its low railway rates, its exceptionally good shipping privileges, its excellent climate, and its perfect social conditions, has a combination of advantages not possessed by any other portion of the continent.

Furthermore, these lands, of unexcelled quality, are extraordinarily cheap, while for the man who does not care to undertake farming on so extensive a scale there is the free homestead which offers him all the opportunity for which he is looking.

The prospective purchaser will have no difficulty at all in making a selection of a fine piece of land, well located and convenient to transportation, which may be had for from $15 to $25 an acre, and the railway companies or other holders of large tracts are always glad to sell on easy terms. Or if he desires a farm that is already under cultivation and improved, many such are to be had from farmers who already have made comfortable fortunes and are ready to retire.

It is not to the grain grower only that Western Canada offers great opportunities. If one wishes to go in for cattle raising, there are great stretches of range land both free and for lease; and in many sections of the country there are the finest of grazing lands that may be purchased at very low prices.

The appeal, which has been sent out both by the United States and Canadian governments, for an unstinted, unlimited production of food stuffs to prevent what might otherwise be a famine throughout this great continent—and then consequently, throughout the world—should in itself arouse all the ambition and desire in the heart and soul of the man who is not fighting at the front, to produce all he can. In addition, there is the potent fact that no chances are being taken in answering the appeal. Take it from either standpoint you answer the country's call, although not fighting, and you are also insured against any loss by the high prices that are bound to exist for some time. Whether it be in the United States on its excellent grain lands or in Canada on its splendid grain lands, all should do their bit.—Advertisement.

Cheaper Than Potatoes.

Carl J. Carter, prosecuting attorney of Bartholomew county, passed a delivery truck from a grocery. In the rear of the truck were a half-dozen oil cans and on the end of each spout was a gumdrop.

"What's the idea?" Carter asked the man in charge.

"Gumdrops are cheaper than potatoes," he replied.—Indianapolis News.

Time to Get Rid of Them.

"Taking any high-school boys from the city to work on your farm, Farmer Corntossel?"

"Yes, I think I kin git my money's worth out of 'em, providin' I get rid of 'em before the apples begin ter git ripe."

Sure They Will.

Thomas—Do you think the fighting nations will cede any territory?

Pete—Why, they're all planting acres by the millions.

KAZAN

By
James Oliver Curwood

THERE IS A RUSH OF GOLD HUNTERS ALONG SLAVE RIVER, AND AMONG THOSE PRESENT IS SANDY McTRIGGER, PROSPECTOR AND BAD MAN—SANDY FINDS TRACES OF KAZAN AND HIS MATE.

Fearing dire punishment after killing a man who had attacked his mistress, Kazan, an Alaskan sledge dog, one-quarter wolf, takes to wild life and mates with Gray Wolf. Weeks later, drawn by memory of woman's kindness, Kazan saves the life of Joan and her baby, and with Gray Wolf establishes a lair at Sun Rock, near Joan's home. Gray Wolf is blinded and her pups are killed by a lynx. Joan, her husband and her baby leave the country, so Kazan and Gray Wolf go northward. They are captured by a naturalist, but released out of sympathy.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Shot on the Sand Bar.

July and August of 1911 were months of great fires in the Northland. The swamp home of Kazan and Gray Wolf, and the green valley between the two ridges, had escaped the seas of devastating flame; but now, as they set forth on their wandering adventures again, it was not long before their padded feet came in contact with the seared and blackened desolation. Kazan led his blind mate first into the south. Twenty miles beyond the ridge they struck the fire-killed forests. Winds from Hudson's bay had driven the flames in an unbroken sea into the west, and they had left not a vestige of life or a patch of green. Blind Gray Wolf could not see the blackened world, but she sensed it.

All of her wonderful instincts, sharpened and developed by her blindness, told her that to the north—and not south—lay the hunting-grounds they were seeking. The strain of dog that was in Kazan still pulled him south. It was not because he sought man. It was simply dog instinct to travel southward; in the face of fire it was wolf instinct to travel northward. At the end of the third day Gray Wolf won. They recrossed the little valley between the two ridges, and swung north and west into the Athabasca country, striking a course that would ultimately bring them to the headwaters of the McFarlane river.

Late in the preceding autumn a prospector had come up to Fort Smith, on the Slave river, with a pickle bottle filled with gold dust and nuggets. He had made the find on the McFarlane. The first mails had taken the news to the outside world, and by midwinter the earliest members of a treasure-hunting horde were rushing into the country by snow-shoes and dog-sledge. Other finds came thick and fast. The McFarlane was rich in free gold, and miners by the score staked out their claims along it and began work. Latecomers swung to new fields farther north and east, and to Fort Smith came rumors of "finds" richer than those of the Yukon. A score of men at first—then a hundred, five hundred, a thousand—rushed into the new country. Most of these were from the prairie countries to the south, and from the placer beds of the Saskatchewan and the Frazer. From the far North, traveling by way of the Mackenzie and the Liard, came a smaller number of seasoned prospectors and adventurers from the Yukon—men who knew what it meant to starve and freeze and die by inches.

One of these late comers was Sandy McTrigger. There were several reasons why Sandy had left the Yukon. He was "in bad" with the police who patrolled the country west of Dawson, and he was "broke." In spite of these facts he was one of the best prospectors that had ever followed the shores of the Klondike. He had made discoveries running up to a million or two, and had promptly lost them through gambling and drink. He had no conscience, and little fear. Brutality was the chief thing written in his face. His undershot jaw, his wide eyes, low forehead and grizzly mop of red hair proclaimed him at once as a man not to be trusted beyond one's own vision or the reach of a bullet. It was suspected that he had killed a couple of men, and robbed others, but as yet the police had failed to get anything "on" him. But along with this bad side of him, Sandy McTrigger possessed a coolness and a courage which even his worst enemies could not but admire, and also certain mental depths which his unpleasant features did not proclaim.

Inside of six months Red Gold City had sprung up on the McFarlane, a hundred and fifty miles from Fort Smith, and Fort Smith was five hundred miles from civilization. When Sandy came he looked over the crude collection of shacks, gambling houses and saloons in the new town, and made up his mind that the time was not ripe for any of his "inside" schemes just yet. He gambled a little, and won sufficient to buy himself grub and half an outfit. A feature of this outfit was an old muzzle-loading rifle. Sandy, who always carried the latest Savage on the market, laughed at it. But it was the best his finances would allow of. He started south—up the McFarlane. Beyond a certain point on the river prospectors had found no gold. Sandy pushed confidently beyond this point. Not until he was in new country did he begin his search. Slowly he worked his way up a small tributary whose headwaters were fifty or sixty miles to the south and east. Here and there he found fairly good placer gold. He might have panned six or eight dollars' worth a day. With this much he was disgusted. Week after week he continued to work his way up-stream, and the farther he went the poorer his pans became. At last only occasionally did he find colors. After such disgusting weeks as these Sandy was dangerous—when in the company of others. Alone he was harmless.

One afternoon he ran his canoe ashore on a white strip of sand. This was at a bend, where the stream had widened, and gave promise of at least a few colors. He had bent down close to the edge of the water when something caught his attention on the wet sand. What he saw were the footprints of animals. Two had come down to drink. They had stood side by side. And the footprints were fresh—made not more than an hour or two before. A gleam of interest shot into Sandy's eyes. He looked behind him, and up and down the stream.

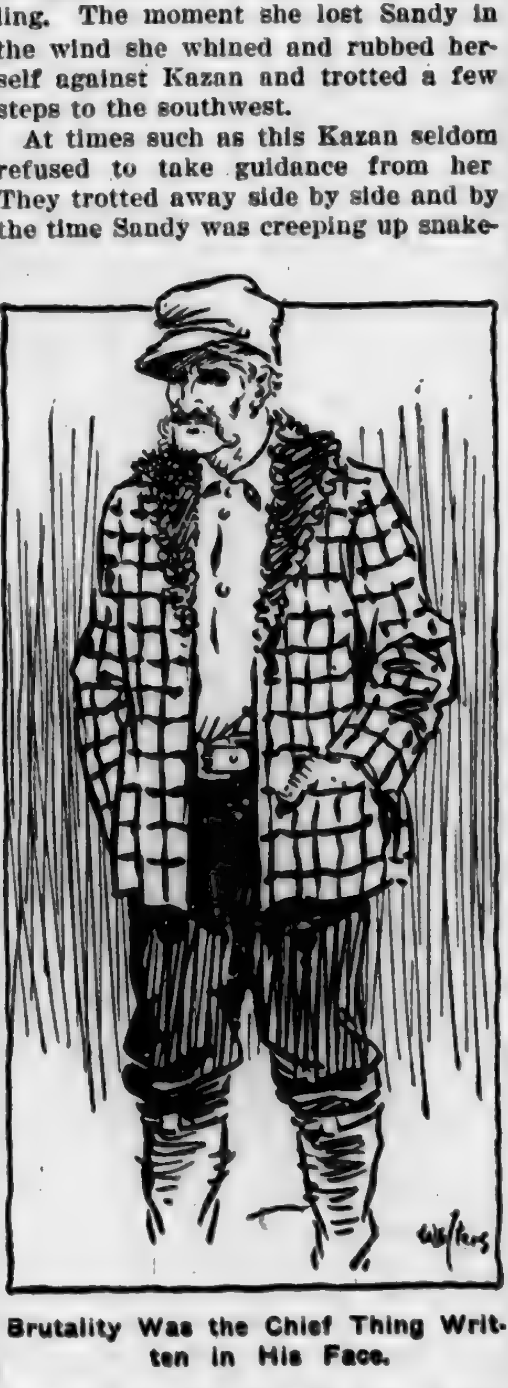
"Wolves," he grunted. "Wish I could 'a' shot at 'em with that old minute-gun back there. Gawd—listen to that! And in broad daylight, too!"

He jumped to his feet, staring off into the bush.

A quarter of a mile away Gray Wolf had caught the dreaded scent of man in the wind, and was giving voice to her warning. It was a long wailing howl, and not until its last echoes had died away did Sandy McTrigger move. Then he returned to the canoe, took out his old gun, put a fresh cap on the nipple and disappeared quickly over the edge of the bank.

For a week Kazan and Gray Wolf had been wandering about the headwaters of the McFarlane and this was the first time since the preceding winter that Gray Wolf had caught the scent of man in the air. When the wind brought the danger-signal to her she was alone. Two or three minutes before the scent came to her Kazan had left her side in swift pursuit of a snow-shoe rabbit, and she lay flat on her belly under a bush, waiting for him. In these moments when she was alone Gray Wolf was constantly sniffing the air. Blindness had developed her scent and hearing until they were next to infallible. First she had heard the rattle of Sandy McTrigger's paddle against the side of his canoe a quarter of a mile away. Scent had followed swiftly. Five minutes after her warning howl Kazan stood at her side, his head flung up, his jaws open and panting. Sandy had hunted Arctic foxes, and he was using the Eskimo tactics now, swinging in a half-circle until he should come up in the face of the wind. Kazan caught a single whiff of the man-tainted air and his spine grew stiff. But blind Gray Wolf was keener than the little red-eyed fox of the north. Her pointed nose slowly followed Sandy's progress. She heard a dry stick crack under his feet three hundred yards away. She caught the metallic click of his gun-barrel as it struck a birch sapling. The moment she lost Sandy in the wind she whined and rubbed herself against Kazan and trotted a few steps to the southwest.

At times such as this Kazan seldom refused to take guidance from her. They trotted away side by side and by the time Sandy was creeping up snake-like with the wind in his face, Kazan was peering from the fringe of river brush down upon the canoe on the white strip of sand. When Sandy returned, after an hour of futile stalking, two fresh tracks led straight down to the canoe. He looked at them in amazement and then a sinister grin wrinkled his ugly face. He chuckled as he went to his kit and dug out a small rubber bag. From this he drew a tightly corked bottle, filled with gelatin capsules. In each little capsule were five grains of strychnine. There were dark hints that once upon a time Sandy McTrigger had tried one of these capsules by dropping it in a cup of coffee and giving it to a man, but the police had never proved it. He was expert in the use of poison. Probably he had killed a thousand foxes in his time, and he chuckled again as he counted out a dozen of the capsules and thought how easy it would be to get this inquisitive pair of wolves. Two or three days before he had killed a caribou, and each of the capsules he now rolled up in a little ball of deer fat, doing the work with short sticks in place of his fingers, so that there would be no man-smell clinging to the death-baits. Before sundown Sandy set out at right-angles over the plain, planting the baits. Most of them he hung to low bushes. Others he dropped in worn rabbit and caribou trails. Then he returned to the creek and cooked his supper.



Brutality Was the Chief Thing Written in His Face.

The next morning he was up early, and off to the poison baits. The first bait was untouched. The second was as he had planted it. The third was gone. A thrill shot through Sandy as he looked about him. Somewhere within a radius of two or three hundred yards he would find his game. Then his glance fell to the ground under the bush where he had hung the poison capsule and an oath broke from his lips. The bait had not been eaten. The caribou fat lay scattered under the bush and still imbedded in the largest portion of it was the little white capsule—unbroken. It was Sandy's first experience with a wild creature whose instincts were sharpened by blindness, and he was puzzled. He had never known this to happen before. If a fox or a wolf could be lured to the point of touching a bait, it followed that the bait was eaten. Sandy went on to the fourth and the fifth baits. They were untouched. The sixth was torn to pieces, like the third. In this instance the capsule was broken and the white powder scattered. Two more poison baits Sandy found pulled down in this manner. He knew that Kazan and Gray Wolf had done the work, for he found the marks of their feet in a dozen different places. The accumulated bad humor of weeks of futile labor found vent in his disappointment and anger. At last he had found something tangible to curse. The failure of his poison baits he accepted as a sort of climax to his general bad luck. Everything was against him, he believed, and he made up his mind to return to Red Gold City. Early in the afternoon he launched his canoe and drifted downstream with the current. He was content to let the current do all of the work today, and he used his paddle just enough to keep his slender craft head on. He leaned back comfortably and smoked his pipe, with the old rifle between his knees. The wind was in his face and he kept a sharp watch for game.

Comes the beginning of the most critical period in the life of Kazan and Gray Wolf. The story is developed to an important point in the next installment.

Discovering Columbus.

During a recent campaign a Tammany leader on the East side, a self-made man and one not entirely completed yet in some parts, was addressing a mass meeting of Italian-born voters on behalf of his party's ticket.

"Gintlemen and fellow citizens," he began, "I deem it an honor to be permitted to address you upon the issues of the day. I have always had a deep admiration for your native land. I vinerate the mimory of that great, that noble, Eyetalian who was the original discoverer of this here land of ours.

"Why, gintlemen, at me mother's knee I was taught to sing that inspirin' song, 'Columbus, the Jim of the Ocean!'"

Whereupon there was loud applause.—Saturday Evening Post.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 17

THE RISEN LORD.

LESSON TEXT—John 20:2-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.—I Cor. 15:20.

The death of Christ made a deep impression upon the beholders (Luke 23:48, 49). Joseph, who seems to have been a secret disciple, obtained the body, and gave it burial (Mark 15: 42-47). In Mark's record we have the story of the discovery of the resurrection by the women, and Matthew tells us how his enemies dealt with that fact. Be sure to use a good harmony of the four gospels in presenting all of these lessons, else some important detail will be overlooked.

I. Mary's Visit to the Tomb (vv. 1-10). The Sabbath ended at sundown, and the shops were then open, and Mary Magdalene was able to purchase spices with which to anoint the dead body of Jesus. There is strong probability that the women paid a visit to the tomb late on Saturday (Matt. 28:1, R. V.). Starting the next morning, "while it was yet dark" (v. 1), they came to the tomb to perform this last service of love. Jesus had no need of such service (Matt. 16:27; 20: 19), but the women were rewarded by receiving the first glimpse of the risen Lord. There were five appearances on this first day of the week: (1) to Mary Magdalene, (2) to the "other women," (3) to Peter; (4) to those on the way to Emmaus, and (5) to the ten disciples, Thomas being absent.

None of these seemed to expect Jesus to be risen, for they had each failed to listen to and ponder his words. The extent and genuineness of the affection of the women is found in that they went to serve Jesus when apparently all hope had failed (I Cor. 13:8, R. V.). As soon as Mary saw the stone rolled away, she concluded that the tomb had been rifled, and hastened to report to the disciples (v. 2). This report of the women to the disciples was considered "as idle tales" (Luke 24:11). With intense eagerness Peter and John ran to the tomb thus reported as being robbed. John, the younger, reached the tomb first, but in reverence did not enter, only stooping to look in (vv. 4, 5). Peter, the impetuous one, rushes inside, and sees the linen clothes lying, and the napkin that had been about the head carefully folded and lying in a place by itself (v. 7). This apparently insignificant detail is one which is really significant, inasmuch as it shows that the tomb had not been rifled, leaving disorder behind. Instead of excitedly snatching the napkin from his face, and hurling it whither it might fall, he had quietly taken it off, and in an orderly way laid it aside. It is in such minute details as this that we see the greatest evidence of the veracity of this record. John entered, and, seeing the evidence, "he believed" (v. 8). Not to have believed up to this time was because they had failed to accept the Scripture (v. 9), a fact for which they alone were responsible (Luke 24: 25-26).

II. Mary Weeping (vv. 11-15). The disciples returned to their own homes, and doubtless to the other disciples (v. 10), but the loving Mary remained behind in this place made sacred as having housed the body of the Lord. It is natural for us to linger in silent meditation in places of our greatest revelation or of our deepest soul experience. Jesus had told his disciples over and over again that he should rise again, and it seems strange that his enemies should have remembered it (Matt. 27:63) and his friends not. Mary looked into the tomb to see if after all there had not been some mistake. She it was who saw the two angels, and, half in wonder and yet in protest, they exclaimed, "Woman, why weepest thou?" Her reply was most natural and touching, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." In sorrow she turns from the tomb, only to see the risen Lord, though as yet she does not recognize him (vv. 14, 15). Her answer to the questions of Jesus are suggestive, and the record is certainly not one that has been adroitly painted, but is the plain record of facts as they actually occurred.

III. Mary Worshiping (vv. 16-18). There must have been an inflection in the voice of Jesus, for, upon the utterance of that one word, "Mary," she recognized her risen Lord. Joyfully she exclaimed, "Rabboni," that is to say, "Master" (v. 16), and would have poured out her love and worship at his feet. Jesus, however, does not suffer her to hold him fast. Mary must leave him, and tell the others. Literally, he says, "Do not lay hold of me but go and make known the glad truth that I am risen again." The risen Lord must return to "My Father" and "My God," whereas the one who would gladly have remained at his feet must go to the brethren, and make known the facts of the fulfillment of prophecy and the resurrection of our Lord.

The bribed soldiers spread abroad the tale that the disciples had stolen his body. The later lives of these disciples, their heroism and martyrdom, are evidence of the absurdity of any such act on their part.

The resurrection of Jesus is a vindication of his claim to being the Son of God. We do well to emphasize his birth, and to dwell much upon his death, yet both of these have no essential value apart from his resurrection.

Apart from this, the cross is the end of a failure. The resurrection demonstrated that Jesus Christ's redemption was not completed upon the cross. The resurrection is better authenticated than any other event in history.

The risen Lord called this weak band of disciples "my brethren" (Matt. 28:10). He is our brother still, and we are to proclaim his work of redemption, the proof of which is the resurrection, unto others who know it not, for this story is no fiction. It is the world's most tremendous and awe-inspiring and glorious fact.

Parables Draw Moslems.

Over 20,000 parable stories, and the life of David Livingstone, have been printed in Arabic and are being distributed to increase Sunday school attendance in Egypt. The Moslem children are eager for this literature. In one school, through the use of this literature, 15 new boys were enrolled, 20 women, 7 girls, and 5 men. In another school 15 new Moslem boys and 10 Moslem girls enrolled. The Sunday school lesson that day was on temperance. These new members were keenly interested, and have been attending since. In another school 40 new pupils came in as the result of the first announcement. The Moslem men are wanting similar literature. "Without a parable spake he not unto them." Will Christ's plan of speech be found the way to win these people to Him?

Real Economy.

A good wife economizes in every way she can in the effort to aid her husband in his sometimes discouraging struggle to lay by a little something for a rainy day, and we know one whose entire order at a grocery yesterday consisted of a nickel's worth of lemons, cashing a $2 check and stealing a pickle.—Columbus (O.) Journal.

Work and Human Welfare.

"Work is the inevitable condition of human life, the true source of human welfare."—Tolstoy.

Let's have the food speculators to register.

The Kaiser doesn't get his tips from the newspaper.

A big help towards "Business as Usual" is to pay your debts.

One of the greatest menaces to the every-man-to-plant-a-garden movement is the chickens of his neighbors.

The United States is not urging Mexico to fight. On the contrary, she has been urging her to peace for some moons.

Don't forget now that patriotism is shown in many ways. Just show us how loyal you are now to this paper by sending in that subscription. We need it.

The sane standard, "Eat enough food and no more," rigidly followed, would reduce greatly food bills in many homes and at the some time tend to improve the physical condition of all members of the household.

When Emperor Wilhelm called a Piqua, Ohio, dentist to look after his throbbing molar, he forgot for the moment the state of war and recognized only what Sherman said about toothache. We wouldn't blame that Yankee dentist if he were to break off a drill in the imperial jaw.

Paying for the War.

Paying for this war is costly, but, as one magazine says, "those who would call the time must pay the piper."

During the next twelve months the war will cost us $3,800,000,000. Two billions of this amount are to be raised by the great Liberty Loan and the rest by new taxation.

This means that more than $33 must be spent for each living human being in the United States. Yet it isn't much, Great Britain is asking her people for $60 per capita.

To raise a loan of $2,000,000,000 requires intensive work by bankers and business men of every section. The bonds to be sold, must be put on sale at every available place where people gather. Above all, two primary inducements must be emphasized—a call for patriotic support and the offer of a sound and sure investment. People must be taught to link profit with patriotism.

The response of the bond issue should be such as to convince both our allies and our enemy of what our participation in the war really means.

THE FRENCH BOND BUYERS.

The French people are the greatest investors in Government bonds in the world. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 Germany demanded and collected from France $1,000,000,000 indemnity. The French people, who were as loyal then in responding to their country's need as their soldiers are today hastening to loan their tremendous sum to their country.

Their patriotism turned to great misfortune into a great benefit. Their thrift in thus saving their money and investing it in government bonds not only brought great prosperity in France but the bonds rose in value all over the world and made the French national credit good wherever civilization existed. Ten years after the bonds were issued they commanded a premium of 25 per cent.

What the American nation is called upon to do in lending the American government $5,000,000,000 and taking its bonds therefor is little compared with the loan of $1,000,000,000 to France after the Franco-Prussian war by the French people. Called upon to do much less than their present allies, the French, the American people will demonstrate that they are second to no people in the world in patriotic support of their government.

There was a man in our town
And he was far from wise.
He jumped into a bramble bush
And scratched out both his eyes.
When he saw his eyes were out,
He laughed with might and main:
He could see as well by night
As if he'd scratched them in again.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

William H. Miller, attorney general of the United States in the cabinet of President Harrison, is dead at his home in Indianapolis.

Art Smith, Fort Wayne's bird-boy, will probably go from Japan to China to give exhibition flights. He is winning great favor in Japan.

The contract for the new armory to be erected at Purdue university has been let, the new building to be erected at a cost of $164,800.

The sexton of the Methodist church at Hamilton, is offering a spittoon to the fellow who spits tobacco juice on the floor of the church during services.

Twenty-five men employed by the Wallace & Hagenbeck shows which exhibited in Fort Wayne Friday registered at the city hall in that city in order to get their cards off in time to be placed on file on registration day, June 5.

To Subscribers:

We have not been bothering you about that subscription to The News; but, honest, now, if it is past due or nearly due, we need it and hope you will not forget us. Remember, the cost of everything we use has advanced; but the price of the paper remains the same. Hence, it is necessary for us to have the money as soon as it is due.

We are not complaining. We are only pointing out to our subscribers the necessity of prompt payment and urging them not to forget us.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

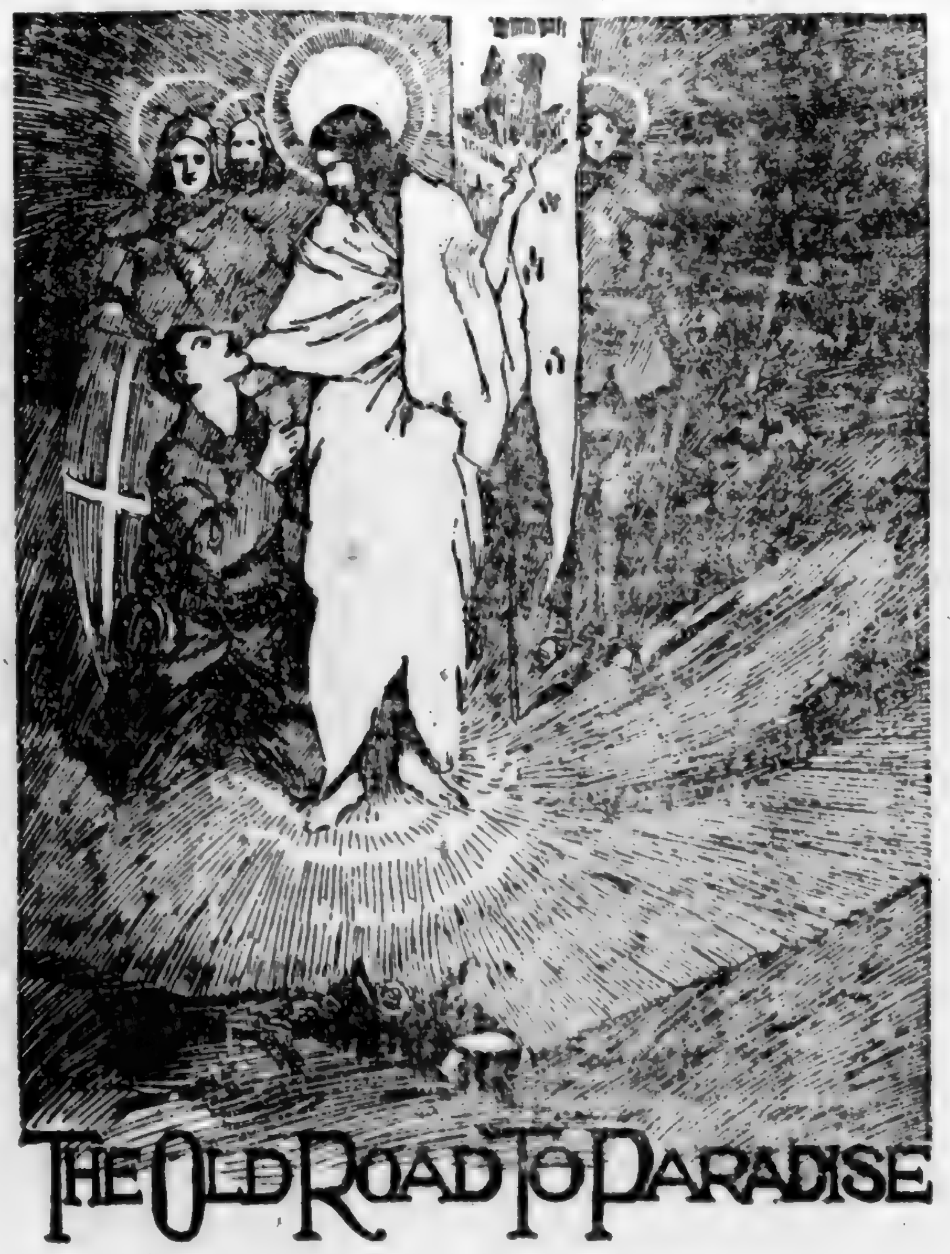
Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.



THE OLD ROAD TO PARADISE

Ours is a dark Eastertide and a scarlet spring,
But high up by heaven's gate all the saints sing,
Glad for the great companies returning to their King!

Oh, in youth the morn's a rose, dusk an amethyst,
All the roads from dusk to dawn gayly wind and twist—
The old road to paradise, easy is it missed!

But out on the wet battlefields few the roadways wind
(One to grief, one to death, no road that's kind),
The old road to paradise, plain it is to find!

(St. Martin in his colonel's cloak, Joan in her mail,
David in his robe and sword—none there be that fail—
Down the road to paradise they stand to greet and hail!)

Where the dark's a terror-thing, morn a hope doubt-crossed
Where the lads lie thinking long out in rain and frost,
There they find their God again long ago they lost.

Where the night comes cruelly, where the hurt men moan,
Where the crushed forgotten ones whisper prayers alone,
Christ along the battlefields comes to lead His own.

Souls that might have withered in world's hot glare,
Blown and gone like shriveled things dusty on the air,
Rank on rank they follow Him, young and strong and fair!

Ours is a sad Eastertide and a woeful day,
Yet high up at heaven's gate all the saints are gay,
For the old road to paradise—'tis a crowded way!

—Margaret Widdemer in Good Housekeeping.

Glad Tidings

What tidings of reverent gladness are voiced by the bells that ring
A summons to men to gather today in the courts of Christ, the King!
We come to our dear Lord's altar; what brightness greets us there!
The gloom of the winter has vanished and beauty is everywhere.
O beautiful, beautiful lilies, what truths you typify!
You seemed to die in the autumn, and yet you did not die.
"Alleluia!" the choir is chanting, with joyous, jubilant voice,
"The Lord is risen, is risen! Rejoice, rejoice, rejoice!"
"He is risen!" O glorious message! "He lives who once was dead!"
And hearts that were heavy with sorrow hear and are comforted.
From the censer cups of the lilies rise scents of myrrh and balm,
And the soul, like a lark, soars upward, winged with the Easter psalm.
And on the Easter morning, while joyful voices sing,
You repeat to all the lesson of the miracle of spring.
From the tomb in which men laid him the stone is rolled away,
And lo! the Christ they sing of is here in our midst today.

—Eben E. Rexford in the Christian Herald.

Significance of Easter Water.

It is said to be a preservative against illness for the whole year to wash oneself in snow or rain water fallen on Easter. In Saxony the peasants also bring their horses into the water to ward off sickness from them. The Easter water, however, has virtue only when, while drawing it, the wind is due east. So far is this carried in the northern parts of Europe that, when the spring is backward, and the Easter waters still ice-bound, the pious folk break through the ice in order to bathe in the streams. Often great numbers gather on the banks and encourage the bathers with shouts and cheers.

New Life, Hopes, and Expectations.

Various as are the interpretations of those profound meanings lying behind the historic observance of the church, the essential feeling of Easter is of resurrection, of new life, of new hopes and expectations, and to this spiritual prophecy the springtime lends its physical reality, graciously pictorializing the promises of faith.

THROUGH THE VALLEY

Only Temporarily Closed Are the Gates Between Mortal and Immortal Life.

THERE came a day when the lilies were glad. They two had met and their souls were one. It was a high time for him, for he was loving another better than himself. It was a high time for her, for it was the great day of faith. They said the one to the other: "Surely heaven is bending low. This is more than life." The moonlight dreamt on the lilies, and the world was young—so young.

Then came a day when the lilies trembled, and then were still. They two went to the valley of tenderness and of death. He stayed at the gate, but she went in. And the lilies were still. And lo, the gates swung wide and she came back. Wrestling with the enemy had made her pale; talking with God had made her white. In her soul were things that never could be said, and in her arms was God's gift to her and her gift to men. It was a wondrous high time for them, for they were three. The twain were giving themselves in order that another might be. And they walked together through the lilies, saying the one to the other: "Miracle of miracles! That which was perfect has been made more perfect. The other was happiness, but this is rapture." And the lilies were glad—so glad.

Then came a day when all the lilies in the garden trembled, and then were still—so still. The three wrestled in the darkness. They three were swept into the valley. They two fought and prayed to have and to hold their own. They two stood and waited and watched. Then the two came back. And the gates were closed. And the lilies were still—yet still.

Then the two went away, hand in hand, through the lilies. They were lonely—so lonely. The sun was gray, and the heart of life was dead. But they said, the one to the other: "God was good to send the little messenger, even though the message was so soon said. Let us be glad."

And lo, from the lilies came their spirit child to walk with them. And they shall have their own forever and forever. There shall be no fear, and their tears shall grow sweeter and sweeter.—Henry M. Edmunds in Indianapolis News.

MANY INDIANA MOTHERS URGE WAR TIME PROHIBITION

Hundreds of Indiana mothers who have sons taking the officers' training course at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, are sending appeals to Senators Watson and New urging them to work and vote for war-time prohibition.

The campaign was started by the Indianapolis W. C. T. U. and has spread to all other parts of the state.

Other work to bring about wartime prohibition is being conducted by E. S. Schumaker, president of the Indiana Anti-Saloon league. Thousands of books by Arthur Mee, an English writer, have been distributed throughout the state. This book details the steps taken by the British government in regard to prohibition since the war started.

In a statement outlining the necessity for prohibition Friday Mr. Shumaker said:

"We must protect the men at home, in the factories, shops, on the farm and in all kinds of industries as well as those engaged in actual fighting. Congress has forbidden the sale of liquor to men in uniform. It is just as necessary to forbid it for civilians. The men at home must be in the best physical condition to manufacture munitions, produce food and other war articles needed by those on the battle fields. Without war prohibition the best work cannot be accomplished."

Do you get up at night? Sanol is surely the best for all kidney or bladder troubles. Sanol gives relief in 24 hours from all backache and bladder troubles. Sanol is a guaranteed remedy. 35c and $1. a bottle at the drug store.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganids are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

ALLIES' BIG VICTORY

Enemy's Lines in Belgium Pierced Along Ten-Mile Front.

STUNNING BLOW TO GERMANS

Kaiser's Troops Demoralized by Explosion of Mines and Unprecedented Artillery Fire—British Losses Reported Light.

London, June 7.—In a tremendous attack which began at three o'clock this morning the British have captured the Messines-Wytschaete ridge, which commands the whole of the German line in Belgium, and have smashed the German salient of which Wytschaete is the apex.

The Germans, though apparently aware that the blow was coming and seemingly prepared to meet it, were driven from their nearly three years' hold on Messines ridge, opposite "poor old" Ypres. Ypres in a sense was avenged today, for Messines ridge has been the vantage point from which the Germans have poured torrents of shells into the stricken city. The British also wiped off an old score against the Germans, for they held the ridge in October, 1914, and with very thin forces, and virtually no artillery, fought bloodily but vainly to hold it when the Prussian troops massed their modern and overpowering weapons of war against it.

Prisoners taken declared that the bombardment of Vimy ridge was child's play compared with the gunfire turned upon Messines ridge.

Record Work of Artillery.

This fire reached its climax just as dawn was graying the eastern skies and while the full moon was still suspended high in the heavens.

The attack was accompanied by all the arts and deviltries of latter-day war. The enemy guns and gun crews had been bathed for days in gas shells sent over by the long-range British guns.

The night was filled with red incendiary flames. Shells that spurted lead in streams crashed in appalling numbers about the heads of the defending soldiers. High-explosive and shrapnel fire was carried out with such rapidity that the earth writhed under the force of the attack.

Mines that had taken two years to dig and fill with an overwhelming explosive broke into an avalanche of flaming destruction in the half light of dawn. This was indeed an Ypres day of retaliation and victory for the vicious sufferings of two years and eight months.

Gunners Work Half Naked.

It was a day of intense heat, and the gunners worked stripped to the waist. The attack went forward with clock-like regularity.

The British casualties were slight. Three out of four of the casualties were reported to be walking cases, who would return to duty in a few days.

The attack began at dawn, and the setting was as picturesque as can well be imaginable. The day before had been hot and sultry. Toward evening there was a series of thunder storms which extended well into the night, the lightning mingling with the flashes of the guns, but the thunder being virtually unnoticed amid the din of the cannon. A full moon struggled continuously to break through the heavy clouds which scudded across the velvety night sky.

Sing on Way to Fight.

On the way to the front were all the familiar pictures of the war—endless trains of motor trucks; all varieties of horse transport, the British soldiers marching to battle light of heart and singing songs familiar in every American community.

From the German line the same lazy, looping rocket signals were ascending to illuminate the treacherous bit of ground between the trenches known as No Man's Land. This nightly "straffing" had been going on so long that the enemy considered it entirely normal and took no alarm. Occasionally blue and yellow rockets would be flung into the air by Germans holding the front line.

Like Volcanoes in Eruption.

Day was scarcely breaking when from the dimly visible ridge a score of fiery volcanoes seemed suddenly to spring from the earth. The night had been filled with strange noises and still stranger sights, but these masses of flame, leaping from the ground, had a meaning all their own. They were the spectacular outward and visible evidences of more than a million pounds of high explosives which had been buried deep in mines below the enemy's positions for months.

All the world appeared lurid and horrible under the sinister glow. The earth shook as if torn by a great seismic disturbance. It was not a single shock. The force of the explosion actually set the earth rocking to and fro, and under the influence of the giant guns, which immediately began to roar from far and near, the trembling continued indefinitely.

It has seemed that the battle of the Somme attained the ultimate in the close assembly of war weapons, but this sudden outpouring on Messines ridge was beyond all calculation. The lighter field guns far forward set up a perfect curtain fire, under which the assaulting troops trudged confidently to their allotted goals. Farther back the deep-throated heavies began to pour out torrents of high explosive shells on the German trenches and communications, while still other guns—enough to win any ordinary battle—confined themselves solely to the task of deluging German guns and gunners in baths of gas fired in shells of every conceivable caliber.

The effect of this counter battery work was not appreciated until later in the day, when the infantry sent back word that their progress had not been hampered by the enemy artillery and that their casualties amounted to virtually nothing.

Enemy Signals for Help.

Great black observation balloons had stolen skyward during the din of the newly begun battle. In the wood back of the windmill spring birds, awakened by the deafening clamor, had begun to sing joyously. Like so many children who have come into the consciousness of being in the midst of the war, these birds regarded the appalling noise of the battle as a normal condition of life.

The smoke of the giant mines exploded along the battle front meantime rose in great, curling plumes toward the sky and was punctuated by red signals for help from the stricken Germans in the front and support lines. Never was the air filled with more frantic notices of danger. The entire horizon glowed with red balls of fire sent up by the nervous Germans.

More and more British airplanes began to make their appearance. One flew over the lines, the flashes of the guns being reflected brilliantly on its highly glazed wings.

Under this appalling fire trudged forward on the ten-mile front General Plumer's army. At many places the men found German troops utterly dazed by the mine explosion and the ordeal of the artillery fire.

Break Before Vicious Fire.

Many of these troops had but recently come from Russia, where they had spent 18 months and knew nothing of what actual warfare was like on the western front. They had bolted at the first mine explosion and had only been gathered together in groups by their noncommissioned officers when the British appeared out of the smoke and shells and made them prisoner.

They said they had been given to understand by their officers that the British always killed their prisoners. It was really pitiful in some instances to see the manner in which these prisoners cringed to their captors.

As a matter of fact, the British soldier, when the fighting is done, is inclined almost too strongly to treat the German prisoners as pals. Some of the prisoners taken today had only gone into the German lines last night and had made their way forward under a galling fire and had lost heavily. But the troops already in the line were calling for relief in such a manner that their appeals could not be denied.

Enemy Bewildered by Attack.

In view of the fact that the attack had been expected the German commanders were endeavoring to get their best units actually into the fighting front, but had underestimated when the British would strike. The troops in a strange line were utterly bewildered when the attack began and fell easy prey to the advancing British.

The battle was far more visible during the first uncertain moments than later when the sun gradually burned its way through the eastern banks of clouds. By that time the smoke of exploding shells and the vapors from the blinding barrage, which had been part of the artillery duty, obscured the more distant landscape to such an extent that the roaring guns could not be seen at all, although the firing was almost at one's feet. The brilliantly leaping shrapnel shells, breaking far above ground, appeared through a thick mist only as brief and brilliant electric sparks.

British Supreme in the Air.

For a month past, but especially since June 1, the airplanes on this front have been indefatigably at work during every possible flying hour. They had brought down nearly 50 machines in six days as a means of blinding the enemy. Lately the Germans have endeavored valiantly to obtain airplane observations for their artillery, but their observing machines have seldom been able to direct more than one or two shots before the British fighting scouts had pounced upon them and either sent them crashing to the earth or had driven them to cover at breakneck speed.

Today the British planes flew far and long over the enemy's retreating lines and were only challenged by some very bad-shooting anti-aircraft batteries. All through the day British planes ruled the air. They co-operated actively with the British artillery and infantry in maintaining the success of this brilliant episode in modern warfare.

BRITISH PREMIER HEARS GUNS WHEN BATTLE OPENS

Terrific Detonations Carried Through the Air for a Distance of More Than 140 Miles.

London, June 7.—The tremendous explosions that opened the British attack on Wytschaete bend were heard by David Lloyd George, the British premier, who was staying for the night at his residence, Walton Heath, 140 miles away.

The plans for the attack had been long maturing and when the preparations were perfected the premier was acquainted with the exact hour it was intended to open it. Accordingly, on retiring last night Mr. Lloyd George gave orders to be called at three.

The premier and other members of his household clearly heard the tremendous detonations, as also did persons at the premier's official residence in London, who supposed they were the sounds of heavy guns until later they learned whence they came.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

HAS DUTY OF PROTECTING SOLDIERS

Drink and immorality have been the bane of the soldiers' camps in all countries. At times as many as one-fourth of the enrollment have been in the clutch of one or the other. In Europe, during the present war, the ravages of disease and the effects of inebriety have been so extensive at times that the most stringent regulations have been established. But in the main the measures adopted have been repressive and curative after the fact. The attack on the camp evils was not begun until their inroads made action imperative.

In the United States the problem of camp evils is to be attacked in a way and on a scale never undertaken in the world before. Greatest emphasis is to be placed on prevention, on effective action before the fact, instead of after it. To achieve this, to evolve a new kind of soldiers' training camp, is the task of the newly appointed federal commission on training camp activities, with Raymond B. Fosdick at its head. Already this work has begun, with the opening of the training camps for the preliminary officers' training corps.

Immediately around the camps will be zones, according to the plans of the commission, to bar out infections and alcoholic excess, but the aim will be, in following out the later principles of phychology, to withdraw, so far as possible, the attention of the soldier from the rigid restrictions of the zones by the organized presentation of better means of recreation and enjoyment.

MASTER OF TRANSPORTATION

Samuel M. Felton, president of the Chicago Great Western railway, has been selected to take charge of arrangements for sending the regiments of American railroad men to France.

Mr. Felton some time ago was appointed adviser to the chief of army engineers in relation to railroad affairs. As such, it was said, he will be in charge of arrangements for sending the American railroad men abroad.

It is understood that Mr. Felton will not necessarily accompany the forces.

The plan is to send 10,000 skilled men to operate and maintain the French roads behind the battle lines. They need reconstruction and expert operation, for which the French military forces cannot spare their own men.

Regarding these plans Mr. Felton declined to make any extended statement.

"There is nothing more that can be said, and nothing that will be said. It is to the interest of all concerned that no details be printed."

One report had it that Mr. Felton had been appointed by the council of national defense. That is incorrect. He was aiding the government before the council of national defense came into existence.

He was selected by the secretary of war when the Mexican trouble started as adviser to the army engineers in transportation and railroading.

GIVES SERVICE TO RED CROSS

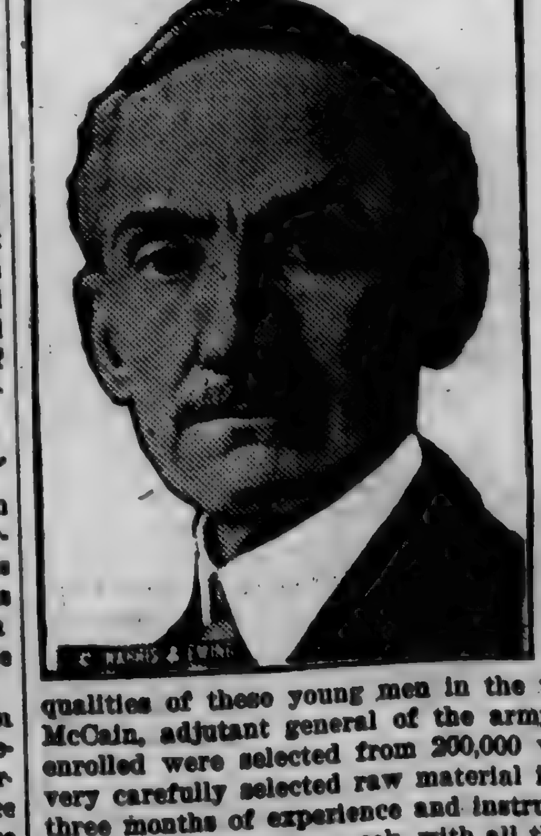
Robert S. Lovett, chairman of the board of the Union Pacific railroad, has volunteered "the whole of his time during the war to any work to which he might be assigned," by the American Red Cross. In a letter to Henry P. Davison, chairman of the war council of the Red Cross, Mr. Lovett said he was "too old to go to the front," but was anxious to do his "bit" in whatever manner he could be made useful.

Accordingly, Mr. Davison asked him to come to Washington for a conference preliminary to the formation of a committee to prevent duplication and waste in all activities of relief and alleviation resulting from the war. He also was asked to accept the chairmanship of this committee.

Others requested to join Mr. Lovett at the conference in Washington, according to Mr. Davison, are Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, Protestant Episcopal bishop of the Philippines; A. D. Hoderpyl of Grand Rapids, Mich.; George Wharton Pepper of Philadelphia; Edward D. Butler of Chicago, and John F. Moors of Boston.

"It is singularly in keeping with the stupendous things which the Red Cross is already being called upon to do, and is planning to do, not only to relieving sufferings, but to help win this war, that big men of affairs like Mr. Lovett should feel it to be worth their while to place themselves thus unreservedly at the nation's service," said Mr. Davison.

HIS TASK TO TRAIN OFFICERS



Without any thought of even suggesting a comparison that might be odious to the thoroughly trained officers of the United States regular army and with full appreciation of the fact that three months of drill and instruction can never produce the results of four years of hard work in what Joffre has called the greatest military school in the world, it may still be said that the country now has 16 new military schools working full-blast for the manufacture of personnel to officer the great army that will be evolved out of the selective drafts by the end of the summer. They might be called new West Points to the extent that the officers of the army who have planned them, and who are managing them, are determined that the spirit of these great camps shall be the spirit of the academy on the Hudson.

"In any attempt to appraise the qualities of these young men in the training camps," said Brig. Gen. H. P. McCain, adjutant general of the army, "we must remember that the 40,000 enrolled were selected from 200,000 who applied for enrollment. And this very carefully selected raw material is to be subjected to the severe test of three months of experience and instruction to the tune of something over 47 hours of hard work a week, with all the work and all the leisure under strict military dicipline."

GAME FISHING

LITTLE PAN-FISH FUN.

My Dear Buck:

There's a great big army of little fish that don't seem to get the proper credit for all the fun and pleasure they have given fishermen. Of course, old man, a great big chunk of this fun happened way back in the knee-pants' stage of most fellow's fishing days, but at that, when the real game fellows are off the feed and prospects appear good for an empty stringer, and it looks like bacon and flapjacks for the evening meal, just toss out a line and give the little fellows a nibble at your bait. These little old nibblers include in their ranks the crappie, rock bass, blue gill, sunfish and yellow or striped perch.

As a pan fish you can't beat 'em. Browned to a turn in plenty of bacon grease or broiled over the open campfire they are a dish that would make even J. D. forget his stomach, and after an hour on the trail or a particularly hard portage, you thank your lucky stars when the feed bag has a generous portion of "little fellers" done to a turn.

Get 'Em Any Old Time.

Of course, they don't put up a scream of a fight like their cousins the basses, but they are accommodating little cusses and bite any time in the day and most any time in the season, especially when at a time the real game fellows have a tendency to overlook a good thing in the shape of bait or lure. Although they only make a short little fight, there's a way of fishing for them that will give you quite a bit of fun and please even the sure-enough fisherman who is seemingly shocked when you even mention pan fish to him. Of course, most of that disdain stuff is merely bull on the part of the fellow that hops up in the clouds when you mention little pannies.

Light Fly Rod Best.

Here is the tackle that put pep in the pan-fish game. Get the lightest, whippiest steel fly rod you can find, about ten feet in length; use an ordinary soft-braided silk casting line and a number eight or ten hook, and do a little still fishing. With this rigging you will be pleasantly surprised at the sport in landing a fair-sized panner. They start out with quite a showy fight, but it don't last long. However, with this tackle, old scout, they'll play better and show more spunk than with the ordinary casting rod, and take it as a side tip you won't land everyone you hook at that.

The crappie is found in most ponds, lagoons, and lakes, as well as the more sluggish streams, and they like the quiet waters. They bite best in the early spring, in June and the fall, although you get them most any time. For a still-fishing bait they like grasshoppers, worms or live minnows, and you can catch them trolling with minnow or very small spoonhook, while at times they will rise to the trout fly.

The rock bass prefers the clear, cool water, and is not only found in nearly every lake, pond and river, but also in the little creeks and streams. In the lakes you will find him where the reeds and underwater grasses grow and in the streams he dotes on the deep holes among the rocks and bowlders or around stumps, brush or windfalls. Most any kind of bait suits him, but small minnows, angleworms and white wood-grubs make him swim around and take notice. They put up quite a stagger at fighting when first hooked, and make a final effort when brought up to the boat. A small red ibis or white miller fly often tempts them, and very small frogs or crawfish interest the larger ones.

Striped Perch Good Biter.

The yellow or striped perch is probably the best little biter in the whole outfit, and although he does not as a rule fight like a heavyweight, if you get a two-pounder on light fly tackle you know there is a fish on the far end of the line. Go after him in about thirty to forty feet of water and you get the big ones. With any sort of bait you can land him in good numbers most any time, and even through the ice in winter he is an accommodating fellow. The perch is a great little favorite with the women and children who don't go after the gamer fellows, and many pleasant days can be spent for this popular little panner. A bait that looks good to a bluegill tickles the fancy of the perch, and any old kind of a hook and line is tackle enough to get him, although the real sport is to be had with the long, light steel fly rod.

Taken as a whole, the pan fish are a gentlemanly little bunch of good fellows, always eager to take a nibble and save a fisherman from ringing up a "goose egg" for the day's fishing, and to his good, clean method of living we can thank him for his fine flavor, and crown him king of fresh water fish food.

A boy who had done something to incur the wrath of his mother and then had taken to his heels was hotly pursued for some distance by her.

Finding it was useless to continue the pursuit, and almost beside herself with rage, the old lady shouted at the top of her voice:

Ideal Alarm Clock.

A customer had overhauled a large number of clocks of all shapes, sizes and descriptions, but nothing seemed exactly to suit his tastes. At length the jeweler, in despair, fetched out a massive timepiece of complicated design.

"Here, sir, is a clock which will, I think, suit your esthetic taste. At precisely ten o'clock every morning the tiny bells chime and a bird hops out and sings a carol."

"I will take that if you will make a few changes in it."

"With pleasure," the jeweler said.

"I have a daughter," went on the customer, "and I want the clock for the room where she entertains her company. Make it so that at eleven o'clock at night a milkman's bell will ring and a newsboy will skip out and shout 'Morning papers.'"

Serious Work to Do.

"Are you going to take any city boarders this summer?"

"No," replied Farmer Cobbles. "Me and th' hired men will be so busy raisin' food crops that we won't be able ter entertain 'em with our quaint rural dialect and unsophisticated ways."

Poor Way to Help.

"I'm going to offer my services to my country in case of war."

"To do what?"

"To cook."

"Don't. It's hard enough to get recruits as it is."

SICK WOMAN HAD CRYING SPELLS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Enhaut, Pa.—"I was all run down and weak inwardly. I had female troubles and nervous feelings and my head bothered me. I would often have crying spells and feel as if I was not safe. If I heard anyone coming I would run and lock the door so they would not see me. I tried several doctors and they did not help me so I said to my mother 'I guess I will have to die as there is no help for me.' She got me one of your little books and my husband said I should try one bottle. I stopped the doctor's medicine and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It soon made a change in me and now I am strong and do all my work."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS BAUGHMAN, Box 36, Enhaut, Pa.

PAIN? NOT A BIT!
LIFT YOUR CORNS
OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away
with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

How to Form a Red Cross Chapter

Just as the family is the group on which all modern civilization is based, and of which counties, states and nations are formed, so the chapter is the unit on which is based the great work of the American Red Cross. The aim of this article is to tell, as clearly and briefly as may be, the best way to form a chapter.

A small group of persons—three or four or half a dozen, or even ten—should hold an informal meeting and reach a mutual understanding of what is to be done. They must understand that the Red Cross chapter is not a sewing society, nor a physicians' club, nor a nurses' organization, nor a political or religious group of any kind. It is a union of the brightest and strongest men and women of any community, formed to prepare for the alleviation of human misery.

This being true, those who form the chapter must be men and women who command the respect of the community. It has been found well to have in this group a representative of the local chamber of commerce or whatever business organization the community affords. Physicians, lawyers, clergymen, educators, bankers, business men—whoever are leaders in the daily life of the community—make good material for Red Cross work. Politics and creed are never considered at all.

It is preferred that each county have a chapter, usually located at the county seat, but there is no hard and fast rule. In any case, those who wish to form a chapter should agree on a course, form themselves into an organization committee, choose a chairman and secretary, and write to the Division Director of the Red Cross for permission to organize a chapter. In the letter asking this permission, a brief account should be given of each of those in the movement, for the director invariably makes inquiry, before granting permission, to make sure that the chapter will be in capable and trustworthy hands.

The division director will send a blank form petition, which is to be filled out with the names, addresses and other items concerning each of the petitioners, and returned to him. If it appears that responsible and representative men and women are back of the movement, he will grant authority to organize a chapter.

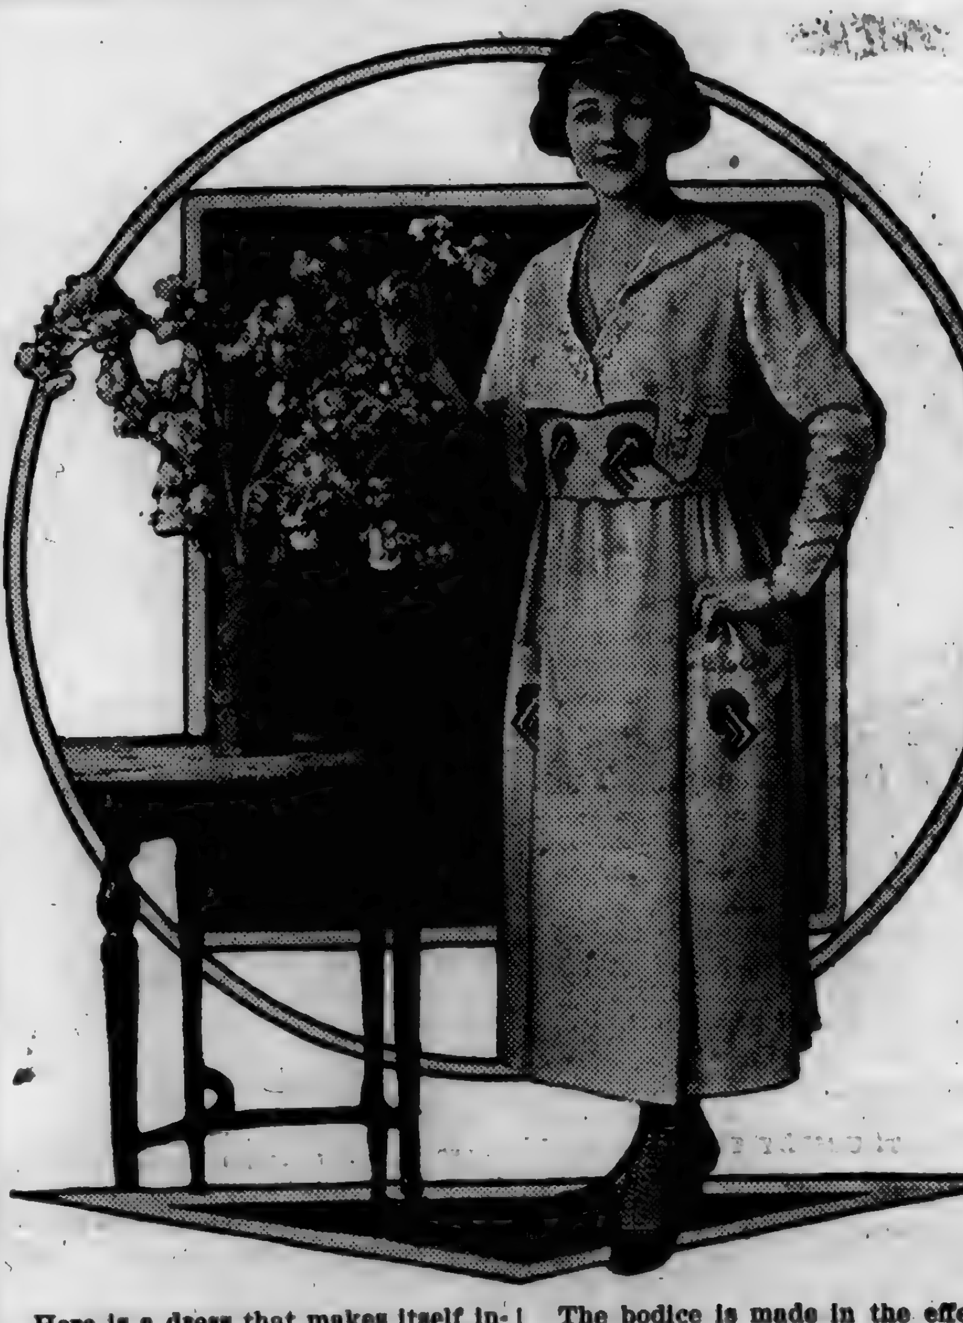
The next step is a meeting of the group, already organized into a committee on organization, together with a few other of the strongest men and women of the community, but not a public mass meeting. At this meeting a board of trustees of from 12 to 36 is usually elected, one-third to hold office one year, one-third two years, and one-third three years. This board then elects a central committee of ten members, the central committee chooses the chapter chairman, and the chairman with the aid of the central committee names the principal committees.

It has been found best to elect an experienced business man and capable executive as chairman. In only a few instances have women been chosen. The secretary must be familiar with the work of keeping records, and carrying on businesslike correspondence with men whose every minute is valuable. The treasurer is usually the president of a strong bank. Chairman, secretary and treasurer are usually ex officio members of the executive committee.

When the chapter has been fully organized, a certificate of organization and election, made out on blanks which will have been furnished, will be sent to the division director. If he finds it regular, he will forward it to the Director of Chapters, at Washington, it will be taken by him before the central committee, and a formal recognition of the new chapter will be granted. From that moment the chapter is the official representative of the American Red Cross in the territory over which it has jurisdiction.

The name of the chapter is usually that of the town in which it is formed. The name must be geographical, and the territory over which the chapter wishes jurisdiction must be clearly set forth in the petition, and will be as clearly defined in the authority to organize, and in the formal recognition by the central committee.

For the Heart of Summer



Here is a dress that makes itself instantly liked, with simplicity and style the paramount features in its make-up, and much originality in its design, to proclaim it distinguished. It is made of tussah silk, but can be successfully copied in the heavier cotton fabrics for summer, without losing any of its good points. But if you copy it, be faithful to the original, for one cannot imagine a departure from it that would not mar the copy.

The dress as shown is in oyster white, with figures on the belt and pockets in blue and black—the disks in blue and the bars in black. It is made with a straight skirt, having a three-inch hem at the bottom and fullness gathered in at the waistline and arranged in a panel at the back and front. The skirt is set on to a muslin underbodice, which is sleeveless and finished at the neck with folds of white georgette crepe. The wide girdle fastens with snap fasteners, at the left side. The square pockets are set on at each side and finished with flat pearl buttons.

The bodice is made in the effect of a short jacket, with tabs at the back and front, finished about the edges with three rows of machine stitching. The tabs make a place for flat pearl buttons in all their modest glory, and they appear again in rows of four at the front of the bodice. The sleeves are finished on the outside seam with five buttons, beginning at the wrist.

Dots and Dashes.

When your frock or your blouse is in need of a little decorative fluffery take some ordinary yarn or floss and do all the hems and things in dots and dashes. You may appear somewhat like a characterization of the Morse code, but you will be pre-eminently in the front rank of the soldier of fashion.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

THE W. C. T. U. "PREPARED."

The Woman's Christian Temperance union, like other patriotic woman's societies, has made quick response to the country's call. As an organization it is in a permanent state of "preparedness"—its machinery splendidly equipped for national crises. Every state and territory is thoroughly organized. Twenty thousand local units, aggregating near half a million women, spring to action at the touch of the button at national headquarters.

For 35 years the W. C. T. U. has had a department of work among soldiers and sailors which has been in close touch with the federal war department. Its superintendent, Mrs. Ella H. Thacher, Washington, D. C., through her associates in the state and local unions, already has emergency plans well under way. These include welfare work at training camps and mobilization centers, the supplying of electric fans and delicacies to army hospitals, the serving of coffee and doughnuts or cake and lemonade to soldiers and marines as they entrain, etc. Another department—that of general relief work—is ready to extend its services and, if demand comes, will issue detailed plans. Both these departments are to be standardized by Red Cross rules.

"The W. C. T. U. members who will most promptly and enthusiastically respond to the official plans for emergency service will be those who for many years have ardently advocated international peace," said Mrs. Anna A. Gordon, national president. "They believe it is now our duty to suffering humanity to unite with the nation in defending the principles of Christian civilization, and thus to answer patriotism's call."

It goes without saying that the Woman's Christian Temperance union will use all its influence to secure the enactment of a nationwide prohibition law as a war measure.

LOOKING PROHIBITIONWARD.

The government of Peru is planning for nationwide prohibition. "Strict laws are to be passed forbidding the making or the importation of drinks containing more than one and one-half of one per cent of alcohol," says Mr. Porfirio Adan of Lima, as quoted by the Christian Science Monitor. "Eventually these also will be eliminated, and the government is even now experimenting with the production of nonalcoholic drinks which gradually can be substituted for the harmful drinks. It is estimated that nearly 75 per cent of the adult population of the republic, both men and women, are addicted to alcoholic drinks."

One step in the movement was an offer by the government of $500 for the best temperance text-book to be used in the public schools.

FREE FROM SALOON DOMINANCE.

Mr. Otto F. Thum, first president of the Colorado Federation of Labor, says that prohibition has strengthened organized labor in that state, and it is in better condition than ever before.

"In Denver," said Mr. Thum, "we have been for many years trying to get the boys to build a labor temple, but were always thrown down by a sinister influence—the saloons. We have 108 unions in Denver and they meet in twenty-eight different buildings. The saloons saw to it that we were not bunched in a labor temple. But now that we are well rid of the saloons we are able to get together, and in a very short time we will have a labor temple to cost about $25,000."

A DANGEROUS CHEMICAL.

If a flagon of alcohol were offered to a student of pharmacology to test as a curiosity, and he applied the standard methods of physiological experiment to it, he could but come to the conclusion that he was dealing with a more dangerous chemical than any now available in the whole range of materia medica, not second to opium or its derivatives as a destroyer of character, a disturber of function and a degenerator of tissue, and he would be quite justified in advising the prohibition of its manufacture and use as a beverage.—Dr. Haven Emerson, Health Commissioner, New York City.

WHICH SHALL WE HEED?

Cry of the wets: S. O. S.—"Save Our Saloons."

Drys reply: S. O. S.—"Save Our Sons."

Wets: S. O. D.—"Save Our Dollars."

Drys: S. O. D.—"Save Our Daughters."

Wets (sobbingly): S. O. B.—"Save Our Business."

Drys: S. O. B.—"Save Our Babies."

WHO DRINKS THE BEER?

"Probably nine-tenths of the beer is consumed by the adult male population in urban communities," said President Edward A. Schmidt of the United States Brewers' association, speaking to the convention in New Orleans. Inadvertently, in this statement President Schmidt admitted that nine-tenths of the beer is consumed in licensed territory.

AS DEBAUCHING AS ALCOHOL.

Beware of drink-manufactured "facts!"

A Woman's Opportunity.

The complexion of Wall street's big organization that works from nine to five is slowly changing as man after man drops out to take up military service. The inroads which have already been made in staffs of the big banking institutions are not serious, but the prospect of losing many more employees in the next few weeks or months is being discussed by employers, and it is the general view that most of the vacancies must be filled by women, says a New York news letter. One of the largest national banks has lost 50 men to Plattsburg and Madison, has 75 more who are in militia organizations, and who will soon leave, and has 460 who are liable to conscription. A prominent trust company has lost upward of 100 men, including the senior vice president, and expects the total to be more than 300 before the end of the year. Plans are being made to fill many departments with girls, who have been found more satisfactory than men in work that is much the same day after day.

And yet, after all that talk, it took the world's greatest war to start the real back-to-the-farm movement.

PETERSON'S OINTMENT BEST FOR ECZEMA

First Application Stops Itching of Eczema, Salt Rheum and Piles.

"Live and let live is my motto," says Peterson. "Druggists all over America sell PETERSON'S OINTMENT for 25 cents a large box and I say to these druggists, if anyone buys my ointment for any of the diseases or ailments for which I recommend it and are not benefited give them their money back.

"I've got a safe full of thankful letters testifying to the mighty healing power of Peterson's Ointment for old and running sores, eczema, salt rheum, ulcers, sore nipples, broken breast, itching scalp and skin, blind, bleeding and itching piles."

John Scott, 283 Virginia St., Buffalo, writes, "Peterson's Ointment is simply wonderful. It cured me of eczema and also piles, and did it so quickly that I was astonished." Adv.

A Close Shave.

Fred Creators, chief deputy United States marshal, answered the telephone, and a woman's voice complained:

"There's a barber out here who has a red, white and black pole."

"Well, what about it?"

"Isn't that enough? It's German colors."—Indianapolis News.

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

Tin Music.

One of the inmates of the Masonic home near Franklin is past ninety years of age. In all his long life he had never heard a phonograph. Recently the members of one of the lodges in the state presented the home with a phonograph. This was a source of wonder to the old man. He had occasion to visit some friends in Franklin, and while there was asked how he liked his new home. "It's all right," he said, "just fine. And, say, we've got a machine down there that is the queerest thing I ever saw. They take a pie pan that has a hole cut in the middle, and put it in the machine. Then they turn a crank and grind up that tin, and it makes music. It's dang good music, too."—Indianapolis News.

Up to the Cook.

"Hi, Mr. Jack, mighty surprised to see you out here," said a negro cook in one of the Indiana company barracks for candidates for the officers' reserve corps at Ft. Harrison. "You sure look different."

"Mr. Jack" looked at the negro and recognized him as a waiter for years in the cafes of big hotels down town.

"What are you doing here?" he asked.

"I'm the cook for the company, and if you don't get enough to eat just sneak 'round to the kitchen."

"I surely will," said the soldier. "I gave you about a million dollars in tips in my life and it's up to you to make good."—Indianapolis News.

Father's Fault.

Two girls were discussing the recent marriage of a mutual friend.

"Everything went off splendidly, didn't it?" said Dora enthusiastically. "And didn't dear Rose look perfectly sweet?"

"Yes, she did," agreed Nora. "She told me after the ceremony that there was only one drawback."

"What was that?" asked Dora inquisitively.

"Well, she felt that her father looked too cheerful when he gave her away."

Fortitude.

"You talk as if you want war."

"I don't. I want peace. But I'm willing to pull myself together and even go to get a dentist in order to stop a toothache."

Incurable.

"Daughter's voice has been a great expense to me."

"And can't anything be done for it?"

When Hubby Fooled Her.

Mrs. Scatterbrain was constantly bemoaning her lot. Her husband, who was entitled to place half the letters of the alphabet after his name, had the most treacherous memory in the world. He could remember nothing his wife told him, in spite of bits of string round his finger and knots in his handkerchief. Only once did Mr. Scatterbrain remember to do his wife's bidding.

Said a friend to Mrs. Scatterbrain: "I think you are getting as bad as your hubby. I got a note from you yesterday dated a whole week ahead."

"Heavens!" gasped Mrs. Scatterbrain, trembling with the shock. "My husband must have posted it the very day I gave it to him!"

Better Way of Putting It.

"I raise pigs for my living."

"Don't be so crude. Say you earn your living by your pen."

Don't sit down and think about what you would do if you could live your life over. Get busy and improve what is left of it.

Nerves All On Edge?

Just as nerve wear is a case of kidney weakness, so is kidney trouble a cause of nervousness. Anyone who has backache, nervousness, "blues," headaches, dizzy spells, urinary ills and a tired, worn feeling, would do well to try Doan's Kidney Pills. This safe, reliable remedy is recommended by thousands who have had relief from just such troubles.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Ida M. Taylor, 216 Ashland Ave., Muncie, Ind., says: "My back was so lame, weak and sore that I could hardly straighten after stooping. I was also bothered by dizzy spells and headaches. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and there were puffy sacs under my eyes. Doan's Kidney Pills have given me great relief from all these ailments."

Them Lights Is Bum

of St. Joe river. When it subsided, history had repeated itself: Jonah had found a retreat (unwillingly) in the belly of a big fish. That fish was was wise, self respecting and conscientious, too. He knew that three days was the limit, established by custom, for holding a mortal prisoner and that his reputation as a successor of the original man swallower depended on his keeping Jonah captive three days, but he determined to do the right thing and not exceed the time limit by even a second. He was wise to the fact that three periods of darkness alternating with three of light must pass before the time was up. He counted on this means of reckoning time, but he did not know—

The idiosyncratic unreliability, the downright perversity of St. Joe electric lights.

Jonah did not have time enough to make himself comfortable for the night before the lights came on. They should have been inoculated for typhoid fever, for they burned at a temperature of 110 degrees. They became gormands for chewing up electricity and spitting out light.

And the evening and the morning were the first day, and five other evenings and mornings were five other days; but the firsh knew it not, for no sooner did the sun go down than the lights came on and staid on, ferociously hunting out and devouring all darkness.

"The longest day I ever saw," thought the fish.

"That fish ain't giving me a square deal," grumbled Jonah.

"Fine lights you're giving us," telephoned St. Joe to Hicksville.

"Y-a-a-s," was the reply.

"I can't understand this," continued the fish (thinking). "There's a screw loo— Ouch! Wow! Zowie! That fool Jonah is lighting another match. Oh, dear! he'll have me cooked before I'm hooked! Up he comes; and then it's me for deep water, where there are no Jonahs."

Said Jonah: "If ever I get out of this, it's me for Hicksville and the murder of Mr. Y-a-a-s."

A moment later, Jonah landed on the sand. And then—

The lights went out!

Inspected the Town

Deputy Fire Marshal Head was in town on Thursday or last week. He came in answer to complaints regarding the old livery barn in the east part of town, which, it is alleged, is a menace to adjacent property. He took the matter under advisement. While here, he inspected the town, accompanied by Assistant Fire Chief Curie, and pronounced it one of the cleanest places he had visited this year. He complimented the St. Joe fire company on the efficiency of its work.

YOUR BIT.

What can you do if you can't be a fighter?
What can you do as "your bit?"
Well, on your food you can go a bit lighter.
Starve yourself? No, not a whit;
Stop buying stuff that you huck after tasting,
Stop making garbage men gay,
Do not stop eatin, but only stop wasting,
Stop making garbage men gay.

—Tend to your garden of truck
Or if you're seeking a new occupation
Go be a farmhand, for luck;
Pay your war taxes and smile as you do it,
Buy a war bond if you can.
If you are anxious to help, why, go to it,
You needn't ponder and plan.

What can you do in this struggle titanic?
Well, you can stick to your place,
Keep both your head and your heart free of panic
Drive out the gloom from your face;
Give all you can where the need is of giving
Keep yourself decently fit
So that wherever you're working or living
You will be "doing your bit."

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 21 1917 NO. 25

Public Serve-Us "Is Bum"

He'll never come back—he'll never come back;
St. Joe will see him no more.
He went up the track and he can not come back
So long as the walking is poor.

The new electric juice from the high power line from Delphos was turned in Saturday and the result was mightily pleasing. The result was fine and the lamps burned steady and clear. This will undoubtedly greatly overcome the difficulties here and will allow the local station to receive repairs that have been badly needed for some months. The managers of the company say this is to be promptly attended to and then our electric worries should be over.—Hicksville Tribune.

THE NEWS has been roasting the electric lights for some time, and had sufficient grounds for so doing; but now gladly reports that the service has been satisfactory since the 9th inst., the date on which the improved current was "turned in" at Hicksville. St. Joe's electrical supply comes from her Ohio neighbor, and any improvement there will extend to this place. THE NEWS hopes that no occasion will arise for saying aught but good about the electric lights.

The serve-us given by two other public utilities, however, is "bum." These are the B. & O. and our telephone system.

The train service over the B. & O. never was any too good, but now it is worse than ever. As a reason for such action, the management of the road says: "In compliance with the desires of the national reserve board that the railroads be prepared to properly handle the freight traffic that they are compelled to move and to make possible the prompt handling of government troops and provide sufficient equipment for their accommodation, the Baltimore & Ohio railroad company has found it necessary to discontinue a number of passenger trains on the summer schedule."

That sounds nice—is an appeal to the people to be patriotic and undergo inconvenience to further the efforts of the government. But it won't wash, isn't fast colors Let's see! What has been done to relieve freight congestion and afford means of moving soldiers on the Garrett-Chicago-Junction division? One plug train of two coaches has been removed—one little dink accommodation. The glad tidings undoubtedly was heralded to Washington: "No more freight tie-ups after this—our tracks are cleared for traffic. Send on your soldiers—we can move 'em, millions of 'em—got two extra coaches." Have any of the through fast lines been taken off? No, not one.

What is the effect on St. Joe? One train a day going east, and that is made up at Garrett. This is an injustice and is inexcusable. St. Joe is willing to suffer inconvenience for the common good, but thinks it unfair to put the burden on the small towns. The remedy is to split fifty-fifty with the through traffic by having one of the fast lines make local stops over a division. The man riding in a Pullman would loose an hour, perhaps a little more; but the small places would have better services.

The telephone system is about as exasperating as the lights formerly were, and would be even more conducive to an unenviable frame of mind were it not at times so amusing. What can be more exasperating than to answer a telephone call and yell "Hello!" till one is black in the face and threatened with apoplexy; and then when about to hang up under the impression that you have been connected up with Riverside cemetery, have the phone set up a rattlety-bang in the left ear that startles you into looking about to see if you can identify the flivver that is about to run you down. Or, on the other hand, what is more amusing than to take down the receiver and hear Everybody and all his sisters and his cousins and his aunts talking at once. Listen, and out of the medley of voices you can hear some things. For instance, this what the writer heard the other day by joining what one person said to that of others:

"Ora Wilmot was down to Harlan Sunday evening—

"And fell right into the girl's arms—

"But she wouldn't let him kiss her—

"No wonder, his face was so dirty—

"On the way home, he ran into a bumble bees' nest—

"And cut his left hind leg on a barb wire fence trying to get away—

"And when h's mother heard of it, she gave him a good spanking."

"Have you heard that Ben Siz-zze's have a new baby at their house—?

"Yes, caught it in Bear creek; weighed 18 pounds, was 3½ feet long and was chuck full of eggs."

"The line's busy."

"Paul Curie is—

"Worth 12½c on the Buffalo market undressed."

"At the funeral, the corpse—

"Told Elza Kinsey he'd never have anything more to do with him."

"The line's busy."

"Understand you've got some shotes for sale.

THE RED CROSS

PATRIOTISM THAT CALLS FOR SOMETHING OTHER THAN TALK

PROCLAMATION

INASMUCH as our thoughts as a nation are now turned in united purpose towards the performance to the utmost of the services and duties which we have assumed in the cause of justice and liberty;

INASMUCH as but a small proportion of our people can have the opportunity to serve upon the actual field of battle, but all men, women and children alike may serve, and serve effectively, by making it possible to care properly for those who do serve under arms at home and abroad; and,

INASMUCH as the American Red Cross is the official recognized agency for voluntary effort in behalf of the armed forces of the nation and for the administration of relief; now,

THEREFORE, by virtue of my authority as President of the United States and as President of the American Red Cross, I, Woodrow Wilson, do hereby proclaim the week ending June 25, as Red Cross week, during which the people of the United States will be called upon to give generously and in a spirit of patriotic sacrifice for the support and maintenance of this work of national need. WOODROW WILSON.
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1917.

The most stupendous and appealing call in the history of the world to aid suffering humanity confronts the Red Cross. Millions of men who have been fighting for liberty lie dead or wounded; millions of women and children are homeless and helpless; hundreds of towns and villages have been destroyed; disease and distress are rampant.

Up to now, our own people have not suffered. While Europe has been pouring out her life blood, America has experienced a prosperity she had never known before.

But now we ourselves are in this gigantic war. We now see that the struggle against autocracy and tyranny which our allies have been making is and has from the first been, in reality, no less our struggle than theirs. We ourselves must now share the suffering which they have endured; we, too, must bear the burdens and we must do our part in a real way.

The Red Cross is a vital factor in the struggle. To peomote efficiency in the administration of its great responsibilities, the president of the United States has created a Red Cross war council. This council knows now only what the minimum requirements are. It is difficult to explain with any definitehess a budget for the expenditures of money, owiug to the greatness of the undertaking.

When our men go to France, we must prepare to take care of them not only when sick and wounded, but they must have a home. Englishmen and Frenchmen, when relieved from time to time from their grim duties in the trenches, can go home; but the American boys can not do this. They must have a home in France—a place for rest and regeneration and wholesome amusement. The Red Cross must—and it alone can—become a real foster parent of our soldiers, and to perform this function properly will require a large sum of money.

AMERICA WILL NOT FAIL

If each individual American now contributes his "bit," there can be no failure. America will, we feel sure, in this again demonstrate her ability to handle a big task in a big way. That we may be able to perform this great task, we shall appeal to the generosity and for the hearty co-operation of the whole American people.

Are the people of this country going to be content with a Red Cross which will take care of our own army only here and abroad? Is that our mission? If it is, then we need no such campaign. Rather, are we going to stamp the rest of the world with patriotism and appreciation of 104,000,000 American people? It remains for each and all of us to so imbue the rest of the people in our respective localities that all will respond in a manner which will electrify the world.

If, in making a survey of the obligations and opportunities of the Red Cross, a gloomy picture is drawn, we must not be discouraged, but rather rejoice in this undertaking and in the confidence that we can by our voluntary action render a service to our afflicted allies which will for all time be a source of pride and satisfaction in a good deed well done. As President Wilson has said: "But a small proportion of our people can have the opportunity to serve upon the actual field of battle; but all men, women and children alike may serve, and serve effectively." We must and all will immediately concentrate our energies and efforts; by contributing freely to this supreme cause, help win the war.

DE KALB COUNTY

A chapter of the Red Cross has been organised in Auburn for DeKalb county; and owing to the population of Auburn not being sufficient to have a chapter of their own, it is to be known as a county chapter; and in addition to the Auburn unit, there are to be chapters over the county, known as Red Cross auxiliaries.

SPENCER TOWNSHIP

An auxiliary chapter for Spencer and the south half of Newville townships was organized at Spencerville last Thursday evening at a meeting held in the Lutheran church. Attorney Howard Mounts and Rev. Tinkam, of Garrett, assisted by a young man named Carroll, explained the object of the Red Cross society. One hundred million dol-

The K. of P. Memorial

The most interesting memorial services in the history of the local K. of P. lodge was held in the rooms of that order on Sunday. A fair sized audience, including nonmembers, was present. The speakers of the day were Revs. Spayd, Coons and Mumma. The first spoke on "The Brotherhood of Man." He argued that organization is necessary along any line of effort, and applied it to fraternal organizations, such as the Knights of Pythias. Rev. Coons' subject was "Pythian Knighthood and Patriotism." The order, he said, taught patriotism. It had its beginning in the days of the civil war and still retains the spirit of that time. The question, "Who Am I?" was the foundation of an interesting talk by Rev. Mumma. He spoke on true manhood. There was plenty of good music.

HIGHWAY BODY CHAIRMAN NAMED

L. H. Wright of Columbus Selected to Head the New State Commission.

ENGINEER TO BE SELECTED

Public Service Commission Shows Wide Variation in Taxing Railroads—Counties Elect Superintendents of Schools.

Indianapolis.—The new state highway commission, meeting for the first time since it was appointed, named L. H. Wright of Columbus, one of its four members for its chairman. The state engineer, who will be the commission's secretary, has not yet been selected. The commission's meeting, which was a closed one, was held with Governor Goodrich in the executive offices.

The commission will establish its headquarters in the statehouse as soon as a room can be found, and will meet again to further outline its work and prepare to put the new highway law into effect. So cramped is the statehouse that it is possible that supreme court judges will be asked to vacate rooms which they continue to occupy for sleeping purposes in order to that the new commission may be accommodated.

Besides Mr. Wright, other members of the highway commission are Louis Taylor of Newbury, David C. Jenkins of Kokomo and Haines Egbert of Goshen.

Grocers Form Association.

The organization of the Indiana Retail Grocers' association was completed at a large meeting of grocers from various parts of the state at the chamber of commerce. The officers and board of directors of the new organization will meet at Muncie to draft the by-laws and attend to other details.

The association was organized under the auspices of the Indianapolis Business Men's association, and J. E. Karns, president of the latter organization, called the meeting to order. It was explained that there are many problems connected with the grocery business which should be solved for the benefit of the business of the whole state.

The following officers of the state association were elected: President, David Meyer, Anderson; vice-president, August Brasse, Fort Wayne; secretary, O. H. Faught, Indianapolis; treasurer, Fred Frohmuth, Muncie; directors, M. H. Totten, Progress; E. A. Orr, Fort Wayne; William P. Sackett, Greencastle; William Buschmann, Indianapolis, and W. J. Davis, Muncie.

Condition of Crops.

The month as a whole has been helpful to wheat, oats and grass crops, but corn, fruit and vegetables did not fare so well, rain hail and tornadoes having done considerable damage in some sections. In the south part of the state the wheat shows marked improvement, but not so much in other sections. Some fields are quite thin, but the plant is strong and thrifty, and yields of from four to forty bushels per acre are indicated. In the northwest section and in the south part of the state the oats acreage is not materially changed, but in the wheat-growing sections of the north the increase is very noticeable. Rains during the last two weeks have been very beneficial to the oats crop and fields are now showing up in fine shape. Rye shows about the same as last month. The harvest will start in about three weeks in the south part of the state. The hay crop and pastures have developed considerably during the month; also an abundant supply of weeds in the meadows and clover fields. Present indications do not point to a bumper supply of apples or peaches, rain, hail and cool weather having injured nearly all of the fruit crops.

Publicity to National Questions.

Four-minute talks given simultaneously in thousands of the moving picture houses of the country will be one way in which the government will give publicity to national questions of most pressing importance. The plan contemplates the organization of a corps of volunteer speakers in every city and town of the country, under the authority and guidance of the national committee of public information, of which George Creel is the chairman and director.

The speeches will be censored, standardized and approved by the committee of public information and will be limited strictly to four minutes, and will be delivered simultaneously in all parts of the country. The Indianapolis organization will work under the immediate direction of the national committee, whose headquarters are in Chicago.

Medical Units Ordered Into Service.

Two medical units of the Indiana National Guard are to be ordered into the federal service, according to announcement from Harry B. Smith, adjutant general. Orders from Washington designated field hospital No. 1 of Indianapolis and ambulance company No. 1 of Frankfort for immediate duty at Fort Benjamin Harrison, in connection with the training of the medical officers' reserve camp, just opened at the government reservation.

Maj. Larus D. Carter is commanding the field hospital No. 1.

Names Two New Deputies.

Making promotions within the department, rather than going outside and securing politicians, Governor Goodrich announced that he had appointed Lawrence F. Orr, Republican, and Walter G. Owens, Democrat, to be the new deputy examiners of the state board of accounts. They have been field examiners for the department.

Mr. Orr becomes the successor of Bert Winters of Lebanon, whose four-year term expired, and Mr. Owens succeeds Rev. Thomas H. Kuhn of Fortville, who resigned recently, after having served two years. Each of the deputies will receive $3,000 a year.

Convention Law Attacked.

An attack on the law calling a constitutional convention in Indiana was made in a suit filed in the Marion county superior court, room 1, by Henry W. Bennett, in which it is alleged that the law is unconstitutional and invalid.

The complaint asks the court to declare the constitutional convention law null and void for several reasons. It also asks the court to knock out that part of the woman suffrage law that gives women the right to vote for the election of delegates to the proposed constitutional convention.

As to Right to Call.

It is alleged in the complaint that the general assembly had no power or authority to call a constitutional convention, because the people of Indiana, in 1913 voted down a proposition to call such a convention. It says that no poll has since been taken to show that the people are in favor of calling such a convention.

Another reason set out in the complaint why the law should be declared unconstitutional is that it gives women the right to vote for delegates when they have no right to vote under the present constitution.

The complaint names all the county clerks in the state, Secretary of State Ed Jackson, Sheriff George V. Coffin and the members of the Marion county because they will have in their hands the enforcement of the law.

Attorneys for Mr. Bennett are Charles Martindale of Indianapolis, Ben Crane of Crawfordsville, Emory B. Sellers of Monticello and Samuel Parker of South Bend.

County Superintendents Elected.

County superintendents of schools were elected throughout Indiana by the township trustees. Many of the incumbents were re-elected. No prolonged contests were reported. The vote was a tie in several counties and the auditor cast the deciding vote. The superintendents, with the counties they represent and their residence follow:

Adams, Ed S. Christen, Decatur; Allen, David O. McComb, Fort Wayne; Bartholomew, Samuel Sharp, Columbus; Benton, F. M. O'Rear, Oxford; Blackford, M. C. Townsend, Hartford City; Boone, E. M. Appointed State Forester.

Richard Lieber, who was appointed secretary of the state board of forestry by Governor Goodrich, has taken charge of the details of his office and has made the announcement that he has selected Charles C. Deam of Bluffton, a Democrat, as state forester. He held the office before under appointment by Governor Marshall. Mr. Lieber has declined the salary connected with the office and has made the stipulation that it shall be used in paying for Mr. Deam's services.

BELGIAN MISSION IN WASHINGTON

EXPRESSES GRATITUDE FOR AID FROM UNITED STATES.

WILL MEET PRESIDENT TODAY

Diplomats Are Received With All Courtesies and Deeper Emotion Than Missions of Greater Nations—Wants Germany Punished.

Washington, June 18.—Belgian's diplomatic mission arrived in Washington yesterday to express its gratitude for all that the United States has done in the past to relieve the suffering of its people and to discuss with American officials, the reparation that is to be demanded of Germany for her violated faith at the beginning of the war, and international crimes, which have followed it.

The representatives of King Albert, who has clung tenaciously for nearly three years to the last free fringe of his country, were received with all the courtesies and probably with deeper emotions than the official missions of the greater nations which preceded them. Secretary Lansing, Councillor Polk and Assistant Secretary Phillips, of the state department, greeted them at the station after which, escorted by two companies of cavalry, they motored to the home of Lers Anderson, former minister of Belgium, which is to be their headquarters.

Baron Ludovic Moncheur, chief of the political bureau of the Belgian foreign office and for eight years minister to this country, is the head of the mission. It is understood he expects to confine his efforts in the United States largely to the ultimate peace questions rather than to immediate war needs. In the latter he will find his wishes, already met, for the United States shortly after its entrance into the war, took over the entire cost of the relief in Belgium. Each month the treasury department advances $7,500,000 for this purpose.

The Belgian commissioners are assured of the simplest work of all the missions which have visited this country. They will find no need for explanation, for argument, or for negotiation. American officials have understood their case fully from the first and will spare no effort to render fullest honors to the representatives of that nation which did not hesitate to lose everything to save its honor from the mailed fist.

The mission will be formally presented to President Wilson probably today, will later be received by the senate and the house and will be entertained at a series of formal receptions and dinners.

Not least of its pleasant tasks will be that of expressing officially the everlasting gratitude which all Belgium feels for America's many services and charities. The great relief organization which kept that devastated country alive between the two groups of belligerents was America in personnel and inspiration and sustained partially by American funds. Also the protest which went up from neutral states at the deportation of Belgian workmen was largely set in motion by the series of vigorous protests which this country sent to Berlin.

POPE REFUSES TO RECALL BISHOP.

Effort to Dislodge Monsignor Endrici Dates Back to Beginning of War.

Paris, June 18.—A Havas dispatch from Rome states that the vatican has announced that it has finally refused to recall the Rt. Rev. Coelstin Endrici bishop of Trent, as demanded by the Austrian government.

The effort to dislodge Monsignore Endrici dates from the beginning of the war when the Austrian government, because of his avowed pro-Italian sentiments, attempted to force from him a declaration of loyalty to Austria. Monsignore Endrici replied: "Christ said render unto Caesar that which is Caesar's. We must obey our governments, even if they are bad. That is why we submit to the emperor."

The Austrian government construed this language as rebellious and sought his withdrawal.

Eleven Food Ships Arrive.

London, June 18.—The American commission for relief in Belgium have announced that since June 7 eleven of their ships, carrying an aggregate of 50,000 tons of foodstuffs, have arrived at Rotterdam, and it is expected an equal number will reach that port in the next two weeks. The receipt of this foodstuff will aid in relieving the serious food shortage in the occupied parts of Belgium and France, where for some time the food supplies have been so low that there have been local famines.

To Release Irishmen.

London, June 18.—It was announced in the house of commons that the government had decided to release all the prisoners taken in the Irish rebellion at Easter Sunday a year ago.

It was late in the afternoon when Kazan and Gray Wolf came out on a sand bar five or six miles down-stream. Kazan was lapping up the cool water when Sandy drifted quietly around a bend a hundred yards above them. If the wind had been right, or if Sandy had been using his paddle, Gray Wolf would have detected danger. It was the metallic click-click of the old-fashioned lock of Sandy's rifle that awakened her to a sense of peril. Instantly she was thrilled by the nearness of it. Kazan heard the sound and stopped drinking to face it. In that moment Sandy pressed the trigger. A belch of smoke, a roar of gunpowder, and Kazan felt a red-hot stream of fire pass with the swiftness of a lightning-flash through his brain. He stumbled back, his legs gave way under him, and he crumpled down in a limp heap. Gray Wolf darted like a streak off into the bush. Blind, she had not seen Kazan wilt down upon the white sand. Not until she was a quarter of a mile away from the terrifying thunder of the white man's rifle did she stop and wait for him.

Sandy McTrigger grounded his canoe on the sand bar with an exultant yell.

"Got you, you old devil, didn't I?" he cried. "I'd 'a' got the other, too, if I'd 'a' had something besides this d—— old relic!"

He turned Kazan's head over with the butt of his gun, and the leer of satisfaction in his face gave place to a sudden look of amazement. For the first time he saw the collar about Kazan's neck.

"My Gawd, it ain't a wolf," he gasped.. "It's a dog, Sandy McTrigger —a dog!"

CHAPTER XV.

Sandy's Method.

McTrigger dropped on his knees in the sand. The look of exultation was gone from his face. He twisted the collar about the dog's limp neck until he came to the worn plate, on which he could make out the faintly engraved letters K-a-z-a-n. He spelled the letters out one by one, and the look in his face was of one who still disbelieved what he had seen and heard.

"A dog!" he exclaimed again. "A dog, Sandy McTrigger an' a—a beauty!"

He rose to his feet and looked down on his victim. A pool of blood lay in the white sand at the end of Kazan's nose. After a moment Sandy bent over to see where his bullet had struck. His inspection filled him with a new and greater interest. The heavy ball from the muzzle-loader had struck Kazan fairly on top of the head. It was a glancing blow that had not even broken the skull, and like a flash Sandy understood the quivering and twitching of Kazan's shoulders and legs. He had thought that they were the last muscular throes of death. But Kazan was not dying. He was only stunned, and would be on his feet again in a few minutes.

Sandy was a connoisseur of dogs—of dogs that had worn sledge traces. He had lived among them two-thirds of his life. He could tell their age, their value, and a part of their history at a glance. In the snow he could tell the trail of a Mackenzie hound from that of a Malemute, and the track of an Eskimo dog from that of a Yukon husky. He looked at Kazan's feet. They were wolf feet, and he chuckled. Kazan was part wild. He was big and powerful, and Sandy thought of, the coming winter, and of the high prices that dogs would bring at Red Gold City. He went to the canoe and returned with a roll of stout moose-hide babiche. Then he sat down cross-legged in front of Kazan and began making a muzzle. He did this by plaiting babiche thongs in the same manner that one does in making a web of a snow-shoe. In ten minutes he had the muzzle over Kazan's nose and fastened securely about his neck. To the dog's collar he then fastened a ten-foot rope of babiche. After that he sat back and waited for Kazan to come to life.

When Kazan first lifted his head he could not see. There was a red film before his eyes. But this passed away swiftly and he saw the man. His first instinct was to rise to his feet. Three times he fell back before he could stand up. Sandy was squatted six feet from him, holding the end of the babiche, and grinning. Kazan's fangs gleamed back. He growled, and the crest along his spine rose menacingly. Sandy jumped to his feet.

"Guess I know what you're figgering on," he said. "I've had your kind before. The d— wolves have turned you bad, an' you'll need a whole lot of club before you're right again. Now, look here."

Sandy had taken the precaution of bringing a thick club along with the babiche. He picked it up from where he had dropped it in the sand. Kazan's strength had fairly returned to him now. He was no longer dizzy. The mist had cleared away from his eyes. Before him he saw once more his old enemy, man—man and the club. All of the wild ferocity of his nature was roused in an instant. Without reasoning he knew that Gray Wolf was gone, and that this man was accountable for her going. He knew that this man had also brought him his own hurt, and what he ascribed to the man he also attributed to the club. In his newer undertaking of things, born of freedom and Gray Wolf, man and club were one and inseparable. With a snarl he leaped at Sandy. The man was not expecting a direct assault, and before he could raise his club or spring aside Kazan had landed full on his chest. The muzzle about Kazan's jaws saved him. Fangs that would have torn his throat open snapped harmlessly. Under the weight of the dog's body he fell back, as if struck down by a catapult.

As quick as a cat he was on his feet again, with the end of the babiche twisted several times about his hand. Kazan leaped again, and this time he was met by a furious swing of the club. It smashed against his shoulder, and sent him down in the sand. Before he could recover Sandy was upon him, with all the fury of a man gone mad. He shortened the babiche by twisting it again and again about his hand, and the club rose and fell with the skill and strength of one long accustomed to its use. The first blows served only to add to Kazan's hatred of man, and the ferocity and fearlessness of his attacks. Again and again he leaped in, and each time the club fell upon him with a force that threatened to break his bones. There was a tense hard look about Sandy's cruel mouth. He had never known a dog like this before, and he was a bit nervous, even with Kazan muzzled. Three times Kazan's fangs would have sunk deep in his flesh had it not been for the babiche. And if the thongs about his jaws should slip, or break—.

Sandy followed up the thought with a smashing blow that landed on Kazan's head, and once more the old battler fell limp upon the sand. McTrigger's breath was coming in quick gasps. He was almost winded. Not until the club slipped from his hand did he realize how desperate the fight had been. Before Kazan recovered from the blow that had stunned him Sandy examined the muzzle and strengthened it by adding another babiche thong. Then he dragged Kazan to a log that high water had thrown up on the shore a few yards away and made the end of the babiche rope fast to a dead snag. After that he pulled his canoe higher up on the sand, and began to prepare camp for the night.

For some minutes after Kazan's stunned senses had become normal he lay motionless, watching Sandy McTrigger. Every bone in his body gave him pain. His jaws were sore and bleeding. His upper lip was smashed where the club had fallen. One eye was almost closed. Several times Sandy came near, much pleased at what he regarded as the good results of the beating. Each time he brought the club. The third time he prodded Kazan with it, and the dog snarled and snapped savagely at the end of it. That was what Sandy wanted—it was an old trick of the dog-slaver. Instantly he was using the club again, until with a whining cry Kazan slunk under the protection of the snag to which he was fastened. He could scarcely drag himself. His right forepaw was smashed. His hind-quarters sank under him. For a time after this second beating he could not have escaped had he been free.

Sandy was in unusually good humor.

"I'll take the devil out of you all right," he told Kazan for the twentieth time. "There's nothin' like beatin's to make dogs an' wimmin live up to the mark. A month from now you'll be worth two hundred dollars or I'll skin you alive!"

Three or four times before dusk Sandy worked to rouse Kazan's animosity. But there was no longer any desire left in Kazan to fight. His two terrific beatings, and the crushing blow of the bullet against his skull, had made him sick. He lay with his head between his forepaws, his eyes closed, and did not see McTrigger. He paid no attention to the meat that was thrown under his nose. He did not know when the last of the sun sank behind the western forests, or when the darkness came. But at last something roused him from his stupor. To his dazed and sickened brain it came like a call from out of the far past, and he raised his head and listened. Out on the sand McTrigger had built a fire, and the man stood in the red glow of it now, facing the dark shadows beyond the shoreline. He, too, was listening. What had roused Kazan came again now—the lost mourning cry of Gray Wolf far out on the plain.

With a whine Kazan was on his feet, tugging at the babiche. Sandy snatched up his club, and leaped toward him.

"Down, you brute!" he commanded.

In the firelight the club rose and fell with ferocious quickness. When McTrigger returned to the fire he was breathing hard again. He tossed his club beside the blankets he had spread out for a bed. It was a different looking club now. It was covered with blood and hair.

Several times that night Kazan heard Gray Wolf's call. He whined softly in response, fearing the club. He watched the fire until the last embers of it died out, and then cautiously dragged himself from under the snag. Two or three times he tried to stand on his feet, but fell back each time. His legs were not broken, but the pain of standing on them was excruciating. He was hot and feverish. All that night he had craved a drink of water. When Sandy crawled out from between his blankets in the early down he gave him both meat and water. Kazan drank the water, but would not touch the meat. Sandy regarded the change in him with satisfaction. By the time the sun was up he had finished his breakfast and was ready to leave. He approached Kazan fearlessly now, without the club. Untying the babiche he dragged the dog to the canoe. Kazan slunk in the sand while his captor fastened the end of the hide rope to the stern of the canoe.

He pushed off, bow foremost. Bracing himself with his paddle he then began to pull Kazan toward the water. In a few moments Kazan stood with his forefeet planted in the damp sand at the edge of the stream. For a brief interval Sandy allowed the babiche to fall slack. Then with a sudden powerful pull he jerked Kazan out into the water. Instantly he sent the canoe into midstream, swung it quickly down with the current, and began to paddle enough to keep the babiche taut about his victim's neck. In spite of his sickness and injuries Kazan was now compelled to swim to keep his head above water. In the wash of the canoe, and with Sandy's strokes growing steadily stronger, his position became each moment one of increasing torture. At times his shaggy head was pulled completely under water. At others Sandy would wait until he had drifted alongside, and then thrust him under with the end of his paddle. He grew weaker. At the end of a half mile he was drowning. Not until then did Sandy pull him alongside and drag him into the canoe. The dog fell limp and gasping in the bottom. Brutal though Sandy's methods had been, they had worked his purpose. In Kazan there was no longer a desire to fight. He no longer struggled for freedom. He knew that this man was his master, and for the time his spirit was gone. All he desired now was to be allowed to lie in the bottom of the canoe, out of reach of the club, and safe from the water. The club lay between him and the man. The end of it was within a foot or two of his nose, and what he smelled was his own blood.

For five days and five nights the journey down-stream continued, and McTrigger's process of civilizing Kazan was continued in three more beatings with the club, and another resort to the water torture. On the morning of the sixth day they reached Red Gold City, and McTrigger put up his tent close to the river. Somewhere he obtained a chain for Kazan, and after fastening the dog securely back of the tent he cut off the bibache muzzle.

"You can't put no meat in a muzzle," he told his prisoner. "An' I want you to git strong—an' fierce as hell. I've got an idee. It's an idee you can lick your weight in wildcats. We'll pull off a stunt pretty soon that'll fill our pockets with dust. I've done it afore, and we can do it here. Wolf an' dog—s'elp me Satan but it'll be a drawin' card!"

Twice a day after this he brought fresh raw meat to Kazan. Quickly Kazan's spirit and courage returned to him. The soreness left his limbs. His battered jaws healed. And after the fourth day each time that Sandy came with meat he greeted him with the challenge of his snarling fangs. McTrigger did not beat him now. He gave him no fish, no tallow and meal—nothing but raw meat. He traveled five miles up the river to bring in the fresh entrail of a caribou that had been killed. One day Sandy brought another man with him and when the stranger came a step too near Kazan made a sudden swift lunge at him. The man jumped back with a startled oath.

"He'll do," he growled. "He's lighter by ten or fifteen pounds than the Dane, but he's got the teeth, an' th' quickness, an' he'll give a good show before he goes under."

"I'll make you a bet of twenty-five per cent of my share that he don't go under," offered Sandy.

"Done!" said the other. "How long before he'll be ready?"

Sandy thought a moment.

"Another week," he said. "He won't have his weight before then. A week from today, we'll say. Next Tuesday night. Does that suit you, Harker?"

Harker nodded.

"Next Tuesday night," he agreed. Then he added, "I'll make it a half of my share that the Dane kills your wolf-dog."

Sandy took a long look at Kazan.

"I'll just take you on that," he said. Then, as he shook Harker's hand, "I don't believe there's a dog between here and the Yukon that can kill the wolf!"

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 24

THE PURPOSE OF JOHN'S GOSPEL (REVIEW—READ JOHN 21:15-25.)

REVIEW—Read John 21:15-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—These are written, that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name. —John 20:31.

There are a variety of methods to be followed in reviewing the work of the past six months and to give variety. Teachers of classes, or superintendents of schools, may select one or combine several, as their judgment dictates. Of course, the easiest way is to procure a good speaker who is familiar with the Gospel of John and the lessons of the past quarter, and let him bring out in the review its most outstanding and salient features.

One method would be to have one-minute talks either by members of the class or persons selected from the school. Each of twelve scholars could be assigned one minute, each to have one of the lessons of the past quarter.

Another good way would be to take the outstanding and significant verses from the lessons of the quarter, not the golden text, but verses which seem to emphasize the outstanding features of the six months' work. "Behold the Lamb of God," (Ch. 1:36): "Ye must be born again." (3:7); "Come see a man which told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?" (4:29): "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation but is passed from death unto life," (5:24). "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work; "I am the light of the world; "He is of age, let him speak for himself; "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I can see." Thus go on through the Gospel and take the significant texts in this way. It will not do to take too many texts or go over too many verses, or perhaps cover all of each verse.

Another method of review would be, particularly in the adult classes, to have each lesson with its present-day emphasis. For instance, the past quarter: Lesson 1—The Christian in his dealing with blindness. Lesson 2—Modern wonders of healing and medical missions. Lesson 3—The shepherding of church members. Lesson 4—Do we know how to give? Lesson 5—Is Christ supreme in our national life? Lesson 6—Ambition and its cure. Lesson 7—The world's good springing from Christ. Lesson 8—Temperance reform. Lesson 9—The Holy Spirit in everyday life. Lesson 10—How Christ is betrayed and denied today. Lesson 11—The uplifting power of the cross. Lesson 12—Why men believe in immortality.

A good method of review would be to have someone take up each of the golden texts, announcing it in advance that pupils may be prepared for this method. The teacher would write the texts of the quarter, each on a separate piece of cardboard, and lay them face down on a table; pupils would then draw the golden texts, one at a time, and tell what the lesson is to which this text belongs, giving as full an account of the lesson as possible, the teacher helping out with questions where necessary.

It will be of great value to the pupils if they can get in this review a clear outline of the main events of Christ's last weeks upon earth, covered particularly by the past quarter. There are forty standing events of the past quarters: (1) The healing of the man born blind; (2) Jesus the good Shepherd; (3) Jesus sending forth the seventy; (4) Jesus in Berea; (5) The raising of Lazarus; (6) The ten lepers healed; (7) Bartimaeus at Jericho; (8) Jesus visits Zaccheus; (9) Jesus anointed by Mary; (10) The fig tree; (11) Triumphal entry; (12) Cleaning the temple; (13) Weeping over Jerusalem; (14) The widow's mite; (15) The Greeks seek Jesus; (16) Preparation for the passover; (17) Washing the disciples' feet; (18) The Lord's supper; (19) The farewell discourse; (20) The farewell prayer; (21) The agony in Gethsemane; (22) Judas betrays Jesus; (23) The arrest of Jesus; (24) Peter denies Jesus; (25) Jesus before Ananias; (26) Jesus before Caiphas; (27) Jesus before the Sanhedrin; (28) The mocking of Jesus; (29) Jesus before Pilate; (30) Jesus before Herod; (31) Pilate condemns Jesus; (32) The sorrowful wait; (33) The crucifixion; (34) The seven last words; (35) Jesus dies; (36) Burial; (37) Resurrection; (38) Appears to Mary; (39) Appearance during the forty days; (40) The ascension.

As brought out heretofore, John sets forth the purpose of this Gospel; namely, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing on him we might have everlasting life, eternal life in his name." (See golden text). Whatever method be the review, we must constantly keep before us the idea to make Jesus as real as if we were with him as his disciples. The word is now dwelling among us "full of grace and truth, giving daily of his fulness and grace for grace." Jesus exhausted the language in giving us comparisons and similies; he is the way, the truth, the life, the bread, the shepherd, the door, the water of life; and in each of these he sets forth some attribute, some manifestation of his life, for he was the way; he himself is the life, the source of life, the life itself; the true life on earth and the eternal life which is to abide forever. The entire review centers about Jesus Christ. A map would be of help.

A Suggestion.

In setting forth this review, let us not as teachers and officers, overlook the opportunity we have of calling from our scholars an expression of the faith that has been born within them. (See Rom. 10:9, 10). Jesus the light of the world has power to set men free from sin and "whom the son shall make free is free indeed." If we properly set him before our scholars, they will be made free from the slavery of sin and enter into the freedom of believers. True faith is built upon facts; those who accept and believe these facts will have everlasting life.

Partnership in Success.

Success is commonly measured by the power it represents. It is expressed by the position, fame, influence, learning, or wealth gained. According to such standards it is the prize of but few. Indeed, it is gauged mainly by superiority to others.

Some are saddened by the thought that success is not for them. Others never dream of winning it, but are well content. For them it is enough if they can help to make it possible for others to gain the goal. Hundreds of fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, are gladly making daily sacrifices that some dear one may gratify a cherished ambition. Many a teacher is faithfully giving painstaking service year after year, not with an eye to personal advancement, but in the earnest hope that scholars may go out to make their own marks and to lift the world. Not superiority but helpfulness is the aim of such.

A machine that automatically draws maps of roads over which it is carried on a wagon is the joint invention of men living in New Jersey and New Hampshire.

Indiana Democrats will be glad to serve under Charles A. Greathouse as state chairman and the organization will prove a most effective one. He is a splendid man and a good fighter who knows the game and has the power of securing support when and where it is needed. He will make good, in fact he long ago did that. As superintendent of public instruction he proved a capable officer and a leader and we believe his choice is a wise one. The state committee gave Bernard Korbly and Charles Sailee, retiring chairman and secretary a splendid compliment and a deserving one in the resolutions and the expressions therein contained are subscribed to by the party workers in the state.

The Sub Situation.

News from London is that the losses due to u-boat warfare are expected to increase, because more submarines are expected to operate in the next few weeks than in the past. The explanation is that a large number were at German bases being overhauled and that they will soon be back on the job.

The sub scare is chronic. For a period the thing is solved, the subs show small results and the American people settle the danger in their minds. Then comes a period of depression abroad, when all the news that the censor lets out tells us about the success of the submersibles. The lack of results during the past few weeks may be due to an absence of the u-boats as set forth by London, or to the withholding of announcements concerning the losses of ships.

Apparently we are not able to count upon any very definite information about the losses. In the meantime rumors of some tremendously vital discovery fades away into the reality of gun fights with subs and sunken American ships. The most promising contrivance, to our mind, is the Hammond aerial torpedo, which is in the stage of experimental success.

The government has already accepted the torpedo, which can be controlled by wireless, as a vital defensive link for the coast, as it can be steered from shore stations. The operation against the sub, however, is a harder problem, and involves control of the torpedo by an aeroplane. It is a well known fact that observers in the air have a deep range of vision beneath the surface of the sea and can spot submarines as they sneak beneath the waves. If the torpedo can be launched from a destroyer or an aeroplane and controlled in its every movement by the observer above the water, who can see the sub, the u-boat menace ought to be a "has been" in the way of perils.

We hope that something definite will result from the work of the inventor, who is now trying to solve the problem of transporting the torpedoes in aeroplanes and of controlling them from midair.

RECREATION FOR SOLDIERS AT FORT HARRISON

Recreation Bureau to Re-establish Ties of Home, Business or Religious Life Severed Upon Joining the Army.

Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., June 18.—Uncle Sam is going to provide more thoroughly and better for the entertainment and recreation of his soldiers than any other country ever provided for its men during war time—including the European nations of today.

Uncle Sam is going at it in a business way. He has made a business proposition out of it. Offices have been opened with directors of war recreation in charge and great organizations have been built up at army posts to take care of this work.

James Edward Rogers, appointed by Secretary of War Baker, is in charge of the war ecreation work for the 8,000 to 10,000 men now at this post, including 5,200 officers in training from Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky and West Virginia.

Already as a result of the work of this war recreation bureau, the city of Indianapolis has been cleaned up of resorts and dives; saloonkeepers are enforcing the federal law prohibiting them from selling liquor to men in uniform and every man in the camp is provided with clean, wholesome recreation in his hours of leisure.

"In previous wars, the soldier was allowed to find his own recreation and usually went to the one place he was welcome—cafes and resorts," said Mr. Rogers today.

"A man's actions are larger determined by his environments—his ties. When a man goes to war, he is suddenly cut off from home, religious, family, fraternal and business ties which have helped him to keep in line. He retains none of these environments when he enters the army.

"Now, the object of the war recreation bureau is to re-establish these ties for the soldier, wherever he may. We have instituted a system here at Fort Harrison to re-establish these ties and our plan is being copied all over the country. We will furnish the connecting link for the men wearing the khaki and the ties of home, fraternal, business and religious life, which were severed when he joined the army.

"We will also serve as a balance wheel for those who realize the conditions and try to help, but are unable to devise the correct means. For instance, 100 Indianapolis mothers got together and wanted to adopt all of the soldier boys at Fort Harrison. We showed them where this could not be done, but directed their attention in the right way so that they could do some real, constructive work."

FALLS OVER IN FIELD; DIES FEW HOURS LATER

Ott Miser Suffers Stroke of Apoplexy at Daughter's Home in Wilmington Township—Helping in the Truck Patch when Stricken.

Ott Miser, age forty-five, of Butler, died of apoplexy at the home of his daughter, Mrs. R. Houser of near Moore, about 2 o'clock Saturday morning.

He has been an employe of the Butler company, but for quite a long time he has been compelled to be off duty on account of stomach trouble.

Friday he went to the home of his daughter and was assisting in the work in the Houser truck patch when he suffered a stroke of apoplexy, and fell in the field. Medical assistance was at once secured but this failed to save his life.

The body was taken to his home in Butler Saturday afternoon. Besides the one daughter and the widow, he is survived by five other children: Mrs. Barney Watson, Mrs. Hoyt Cook, Kermit, Miller and a two-year-old daughter. He was a member of the Butler Woodmen lodge.

TWO FORT WAYNE YOUNG MEN FAIL TO REGISTER

Two Fort Wayne young men were arrested Thursday for failure to register. One of the young men said that he thought he was thirty-one until his brother told him that he was still within the conscription age limits. Another, a Belgian, declared that he could not read English. The two were registered and the United States attorney at Indianapolis advised of the circumstances. The outcome of the cases will depend on his ruling in the matter.

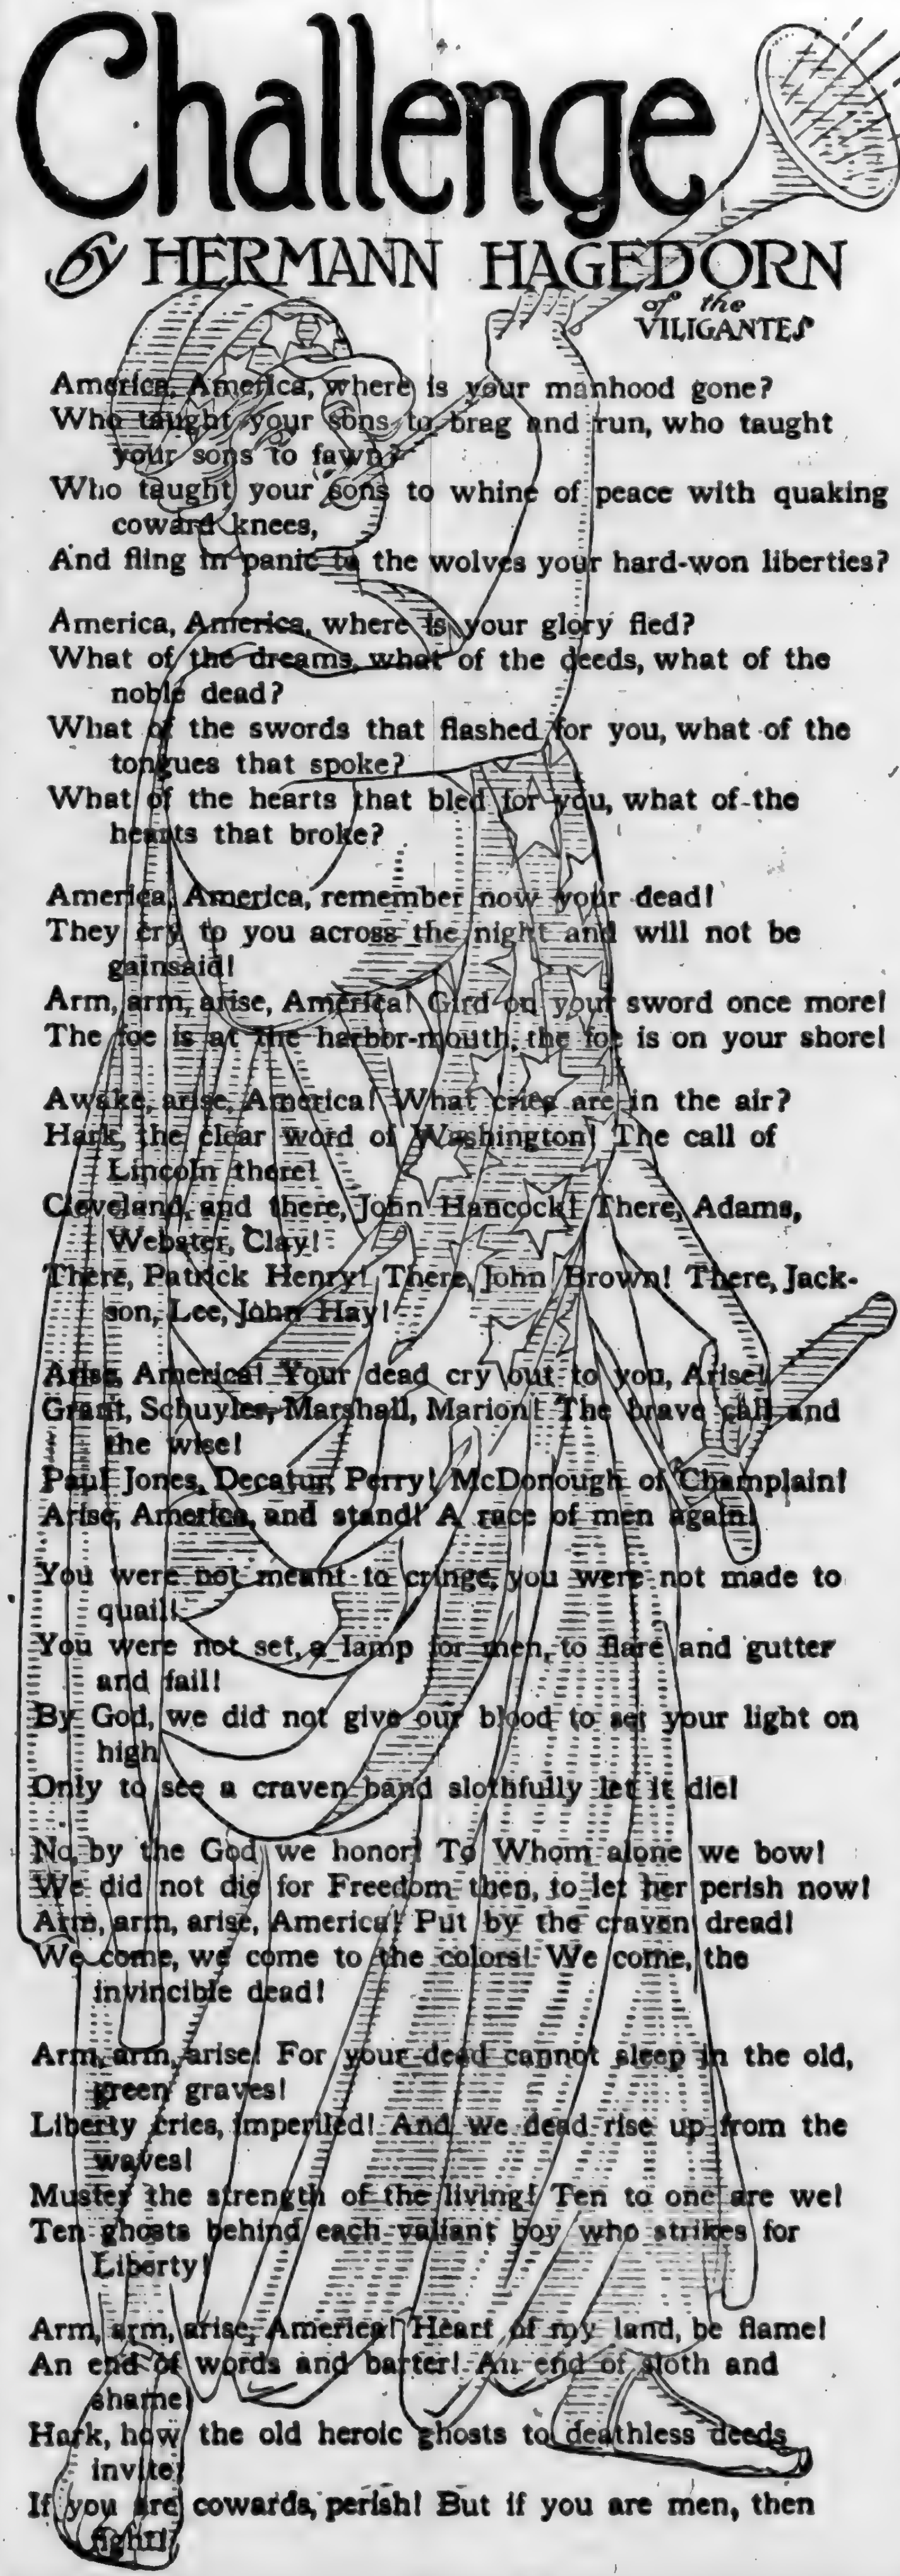
Challenge

By HERMANN HAGEDORN of the VILIGANTES



America, America, where is your manhood gone?
Who taught your sons to brag and run, who taught your sons to fawn?
Who taught your sons to whine of peace with quaking coward knees,
And fling in panic to the wolves your hard-won liberties?

America, America, where is your glory fled?
What of the dreams, what of the deeds, what of the noble dead?
What of the swords that flashed for you, what of the tongues that spoke?
What of the hearts that bled for you, what of the hearts that broke?

America, America, remember now your dead!
They cry to you across the night and will not be gainsaid!
Arm, arm, arise, America! Gird on your sword once more!
The foe is at the harbor-mouth, the foe is on your shore!

Awake, arise, America! What cries are in the air?
Hark, the clear word of Washington! The call of Lincoln there!
Cleveland, and there, John Hancock! There, Adams, Webster, Clay!
There, Patrick Henry! There, John Brown! There, Jackson, Lee, John Hay!

Arise, America! Your dead cry out to you, Arise!
Grant, Schuyler, Marshall, Marion! The brave call and the wise!
Paul Jones, Decatur, Perry! McDonough of Champlain!
Arise, America, and stand! A race of men again!

You were not meant to cringe, you were not made to quail!
You were not set, a lamp for men, to flare and gutter and fail!
By God, we did not give our blood to set your light on high
Only to see a craven band slothfully let it die!

No, by the God we honor! To Whom alone we bow!
We did not die for Freedom then, to let her perish now!
Arm, arm, arise, America! Put by the craven dread!
We come, we come to the colors! We come, the invincible dead!

Arm, arm, arise! For your dead cannot sleep in the old, green graves!
Liberty cries, imperiled! And we dead rise up from the waves!
Muster the strength of the living! Ten to one are we!
Ten ghosts behind each valiant boy who strikes for Liberty!

Arm, arm, arise, America! Heart of my land, be flame!
An end of words and barter! An end of sloth and shame!
Hark, how the old heroic ghosts to deathless deeds invite!
If you are cowards, perish! But if you are men, then fight!

SAIL ON, O SHIP OF STATE

Sail on, O ship of state;
Sail on, O Union, strong and great.
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all its hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.

Sail on, nor far to breast the sea.
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee;
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee.

Not Afraid to Die

It is sweet and glorious to die for one's country.—Horace.

It is related that a private in the army of the Potomac was sentenced to be shot for sleeping at his post of duty. In some way word of the approaching execution came to the attention of President Lincoln and after writing out a reprieve he called his carriage and started out to see that the reprieve did not fail to reach the poor condemned soldier. It was a broiling hot day and the ride to camp was a long one of ten miles, but the great-hearted Lincoln was bent on saving the poor soldier and he went forward. Perhaps the president later forgot the incident amid weightier cares of state, but not so the soldier. When the Third Vermont charged upon the rifle pits before Yorktown the following year the enemy poured a volley upon them. The first man to fall was William Scott of Company K, with six bullets through his body. His comrades caught him as he fell and as his life blood ebbed away, he raised to heaven amid the din of battle, the cries of the dying and the shouts of the enemy, a prayer for the president, and as he died he remarked to his comrades that Lincoln had showed he was no coward and was not afraid to die. At the burial later the chaplain narrated the circumstances to the boys who stood about with uncovered heads. He had prayed for the president and paid him a most fervid and glowing tribute with his dying breath.

STATE DOCTORS WANT TO PREVENT INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Last Year There were 178 Cases of the Dreaded Disease in This State, a New High Record, from Which 30 Deaths Resulted.

Efforts to prevent another outbreak of polimoyelitis, or infantile paralysis, in the state this summer have been undertaken by the Indiana State Medical society in cooperation with Dr. H. H. Mitchell, epidemiologist of the State Board of Health.

The June meetings of the county societies have been devoted to a symposium on the disease, about which comparatively little has been known prior to the epidemics of recent years. Specialists from the larger medical centers have addressed these meetings and the various doctors in turn, are endeavoring to educate the people to proper methods of fighting this disease.

Last year there were 178 cases reported in Indiana, a new high record, from which 30 deaths resulted. The greatest difficulty in controlling this disease is lack of an early diagnosis. Infection results from direct contact with the recognized disease or through the agency of carriers. The reason that infantile paralysis occurs so sporadically is that a carrier of mild, unrecognized cases, impossible to locate, may be in the community.

While the subject of prevention is of great importance, doctors are devoting even greater consideration to the care of the wreckage left after the epidemic, seeking adequate after-treatment which may prevent deformities. The disease leaves behind it in many cases a paralysis which is of itself disabling and which, if neglected, or badly treated, often leads to serious and disabling deformities.

These are preventable, with the exception of those affecting the spine and shoulder, by treatment. The importance of this after treatment may be shown by citing figures on last summer's epidemic. No less than 27,000 cases in the United States were reported, with about one-half of these in the State of New York. New York City showed a fatality of about twenty-six per cent. and of the number who apparently recovered sixty-five per cent. showed serious paralysis and were unable to walk, and nineteen per cent, were partially paralyzed.

NUMBER OF MEN AT FORT HARRISON DWINDLING

Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., June 18.—Rigid physical examinations which will probably eliminate many of the men in training for officers at this post, started today and will continue throughout the week. This is the final and the hardest physical examination which the men will have to undergo and it is expected to eliminate all of those unfit who have so far been able to "get by."

Many of those who started the course a month ago are already among the missing. Out of 5,200 who began on May 15, only 4,078 now remain. About 400 went to other camps and the others, home.

Another batch of embryo aviators left yesterday for Columbus, O.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

CHERRY AND PEAR TREES DAMAGED BY SAW FLIES

Foliage of cherry and pear trees are severely damaged each year by the larvae of a small saw fly and orchardists should take pains to protect their trees, according to a statement issued Thursday by Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist.

"Sometimes the leaves are so severely injured that they have the appearance of having been burned," the statement says: "The flies lay their eggs under the skin of the leaves. When small they are nearly white but as they grow, a dark slimy secretion covers them and they look almost black. Wherever they are noticed the threes should be sprayed with arsenate of lead or they can be dusted with air slacked lime which sticks to the slime on the bodies of the larvae and dries them up. On small trees in the city, they can be washed off by turning a strong stream of water from a hose on the leaves."

TWO ASK CITIZENSHIP

TWO GERMAN BORN CITIZENS OF DEKALB COUNTY, APPLY FOR NATURALIZATION PAPERS

First Applicant is Martin Wagoner, a Farmer of Concord Township—Another is Gust Hafner, Butcher of Spencerville.

Martin Wagoner, farmer, of Concord township, has filed his papers in the county clerk's office petitioning for naturalization. He was born January 1, 1878, at Melgeishousen, Germany, and came to the United States from Bremen, Germany, April 13, 1882, and arrived at New York City May 2, 1882. Mr. Wagoner is married and has one son. October 26, 1900 he declared his intentions in the DeKalb circuit court of becoming an American citizen but had never taken out his final papers.

Gust Hafner, butcher, of Spencerville, is another asking for his naturalization papers. He was born June 27, 1876 at Rieth, Germany, and came to the United States from Bremen, Germany, March 17, 1893 and arrived at New York March 30, 1893. He declared his intentions of becoming a citizen in the Allen county circuit court, October 7, 1898. He is a married man and resides in Spencerville.

"NO TIME FOR IDLERS" SAYS STATE DEFENSE COUNCIL

"This is no time for idlers. It is the plain duty of every able-bodied person to be a contributor as well as a consumer," says the State Council of Defense.

"We suggest the advisability of strict enforcement of the vagrancy laws, not in harshness, but as a matter of justness. The world needs food, and it is only fair that those who eat should be required to work, if they are able to do so, and every effort should be made by the County Councils of Defense to find employment for every one able to work, and at a fair wage.

"We are convinced that if the class of people who make a business of making a living by begging food from house to house are denied this method of sustenance, except those who are ill, a large number of additional laborers will be available for farm work. We suggest that this plan be carried out through the county councils in each county."

VIOLATION OF CHILDREN'S LABOR LAWS AT FT. WAYNE

Fort Wayne authorities are investigating reports that the state labor laws prohibiting the employment of children under 14 years of age are being violated in that city. Except for farm or domestic work, the employment of persons under 14 years of age is forbidden. Moreover, no child may be employed before 7 o'clock in the morning or after 6 o'clock in the evening. No girl under 18 years of age nor boy under 16 years of age may work in a hotel, theater or other place of amusement.

Offenses against these laws is punishable by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $200. Imprisonment may be added, and is for twenty days in case of a second offense.

EIGHT CASES OF DIPHTHERIA REPORTED AT GARRETT

There are now eight cases of diphtheria at Garrett. The health officer of that city is asking that prompt medical attention be given to every person showing indications of the disease.

Fireworks will not be prohibited at Garrett this year as the merchants of that city have purchased their supplies. Next year, however, an ordinance passed by the city council will prohibit the sale or firing of fireworks.

9,500 LOAVES OF BREAD FOR SOLDIERS AT FORT HARRISON

About 9,500 loaves of bread a day are eaten at Fort Harrison near Indianapolis where some 8,000 men are in training, and all these are baked in about nine bakings a day. The bakery is just south of the long line of permanent barracks east of the parade ground, and, according to Major T. Victor Keene, chief sanitary officer, there is not a cleaner, more sanitary bakery anywhere than the one at the fort. Colonel Edwin F. Glenn, camp commandant, has a way of dropping into the bakery every few days, to make sure that the men in camp are getting well baked wholesome bread.

Flour is delivered to Fort Harrison in carloads, and each day's baking consumes about two tons. Four deliveries over the camp are made each day, and the bread is protected carefully from dust and handling in its deliveries to the thirty officers' training companies, the Tenth infantry, the recruits for the Tenth infantry, the Forty-fifth and the Forty-sixth infantry, numbering now about 2,000 men, and the 1,000 men of the medical department. The question of making a profit does not enter into the breadmaking at Fort Harrison, and the bread, as one enlisted man said Tuesday, is "bread as is bread."

Do you get up at night? Sanol is surely the best for all kidney or bladder troubles. Sanol gives relief in 24 hours from all backache and bladder troubles. Sanol is a guaranteed remedy. 35c and $1. a bottle at the drug store.

'WAR FOR FREEDOM'

President Wilson Tells of Aims of United States.

FORCED TO TAKE UP ARMS

Nation Acting in Defense of Our Rights as a Free People and of Our Honor as a Sovereign Government, Is Statement.

Washington, June 15. — President Wilson's Flag day address, delivered in this city, was substantially as follows:

My Fellow Citizens: We meet to celebrate Flag Day because this flag which we honor and under which we serve is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a nation. It has no other character than that which we give it from generation to generation. The choices are ours. It floats in majestic silence above the hosts that execute those choices, whether in peace or in war. And yet, though silent, it speaks to us—speaks to us of the past, of the men and women who went before us and of the records they wrote upon it. We celebrate the day of its birth; and from its birth until now it has witnessed a great history, has floated on high the symbol of great events, of a great plan of life worked out by a great people. We are about to carry it into battle, to lift it where it will draw the fire of our enemies. We are about to bid thousands, hundreds of thousands, it may be millions of our men, the young, the strong, the capable men of the nation, to go forth and die beneath it on fields of blood far away—for what? For some unaccustomed thing? For something for which it has never sought the fire before? American armies were never before sent across the seas. Why are they sent now? For some new purpose, for which this great flag has never been carried before, or for some old, familiar, heroic purpose for which it has seen men, its own men, die on every battlefield upon which Americans have borne arms since the Revolution?

These are questions which must be answered. We are Americans. We in our turn serve America, and can serve her with no private purpose. We must use her flag as she has always used it. We are accountable at the bar of history and must plead in utter frankness what purpose it is we seek to serve.

Forced to Take Up Arms.

It is plain enough how we were forced into the war. The extraordinary insults and aggressions of the imperial German government left us no self-respecting choice but to take up arms in defense of our rights as a free people and of our honor as a sovereign government. The military masters of Germany denied us the right to be neutral. They filled our unsuspecting communities with vicious spies and conspirators and sought to corrupt the opinion of our people in their own behalf. When they found that they could not do that, their agents diligently spread sedition amongst us and sought to draw our own citizens from their allegiance, and some of those agents were men connected with the official embassy of the German government itself here in our own capital. They sought by violence to destroy our industries and arrest our commerce. They tried to incite Mexico to take up arms against us and to draw Japan into a hostile alliance with her—and that, not by indirection, but by direct suggestion from the foreign office in Berlin. They impudently denied us the use of the high seas and repeatedly executed their threat that they would send to their death any of our people who ventured to approach the coasts of Europe. And many of our own people were corrupted. Men began to look upon their own neighbors with suspicion and to wonder in their hot resentment and surprise whether there was any community in which hostile intrigue did not lurk. What great nation in such circumstances would not have taken up arms? Much as we had desired peace, it was denied us, and not of our own choice. This flag under which we serve would have been dishonored had we withheld our hand.

German People Not Enemies.

But that is only part of the story. We know now as clearly as we knew before we were ourselves engaged that we are not enemies of the German people and that they are not our enemies. They did not originate or desire this hideous war or wish that we should be drawn into it; and we are vaguely conscious that we are fighting their cause, as they will some day see it, as well as our own. They are themselves in the grip of the same sinister power that has now at last stretched its ugly talons out and drawn blood from us. The whole world is in the grip of that power and is trying out the great battle which shall determine whether it is to be brought under its mastery or fling itself free.

The war was begun by the military masters of Germany, who proved to be also the masters of Austria-Hungary. These men have never regarded nations as peoples, men, women, and children of like blood and frame as themselves, for whom governments existed and in whom governments had their life. They have regarded them merely as serviceable organizations which they could by force or intrigue bend or corrupt to their own purpose. They have regarded the smaller states, in particular, and the peoples who could be overwhelmed by force, as their natural tools and instruments of domination. Their purpose has long been avowed.

Attitude Toward German People.

Their plan was to throw a broad belt of German military power and political control across the very center of Europe and beyond the Mediterranean into the heart of Asia; and Austria-Hungary was to be as much their tool and pawn as Serbia or Bulgaria or Turkey or the ponderous states of the East. The dream had its heart at Berlin. It could have had a heart nowhere else! It rejected the idea of solidarity of race entirely. The choice of peoples played no part in it at all. They ardently desired to direct their own affairs, would be satisfied only by undisputed independence. They could be kept quiet only by the presence or the constant threat of armed men. The German military statesmen had reckoned with all that and were ready to deal with it in their own way.

Policy One of Deceit.

Is it not easy to understand the eagerness for peace that has been manifested from Berlin ever since the snare was set and sprung? Peace, peace, peace has been the talk of her foreign office for now a year and more; not peace upon her own initiative, but upon the initiative of the nations over which she now deems herself to hold the advantage. Through all sorts of channels it has come to me, and in all sorts of guises, but never with the terms disclosed which the German government would be willing to accept. That government still holds a valuable part of France, though with slowly relaxing grasp, and practically the whole of Belgium. It cannot go further; it dare not go back. It wishes to close its bargain before it is too late

The military masters under whom Germany is bleeding see very clearly to what point Fate has brought them. If they fall back or are forced back an inch, their power both abroad and at home will fall to pieces like a house of cards. If they can secure peace now with the immense advantages still in their hands which they have up to this point apparently gained, they will have justified themselves before the German people; they will have gained by force what they promised to gain by it: an immense expansion of German power, an immense enlargement of German industrial and commercial opportunities. If they fail, their people will thrust them aside; a government accountable to the people themselves will be set up in Germany as it has been in England, in the United States, in France, and in all the great countries of the modern time except Germany. If they succeed they are safe and Germany and the world are undone; if they fail Germany is saved and the world will be at peace. If they succeed, we and all the rest of the world must remain armed, as they will remain, and must make ready for the next step of aggression; if they fail, the world may unite for peace, and Germany may be of the union.

Have Sought to Deceive World.

The present particular aim of the masters of Germany is to deceive all those who throughout the world stand for the rights of peoples and the self-government of nations; for they see what immense strength the forces of justice and of liberalism are gathering out of this war.

The sinister intrigue is being no less actively conducted in this country than in Russia and in every country in Europe to which the agents and dupes of the imperial German government can get access.

In War for Freedom and Justice.

The great fact that stands out above all the rest is that this is a People's war, a war for freedom and justice and self-government amongst all the nations of the world, a war to make the world safe for the peoples who live in it and have made it their own, the German people themselves included; and that with us rests the choice to break through all these hypocrisies and patent cheats and masks of brute force and help set the world free, or else stand aside and let it be dominated a long age through by sheer weight of arms and the arbitrary choices of self-constituted masters, by the nation which can maintain the biggest armies and the most irresistible armaments—a power to which the world has afforded no parallel and in the face of which political freedom must wither and perish,

For us there is but one choice. We have made it. Woe be to the man or group of men that seeks to stand in our way in this day of high resolution when every principle we hold dearest is to be vindicated and made secure for the salvation of the nations. We are ready to plead at the bar of history, and our flag shall wear a new luster.

PLANS FOR COMPLETE HARMONY IN WARFARE.

All Forces Opposing the Central Powers Will Henceforth Work Together Under One Command.

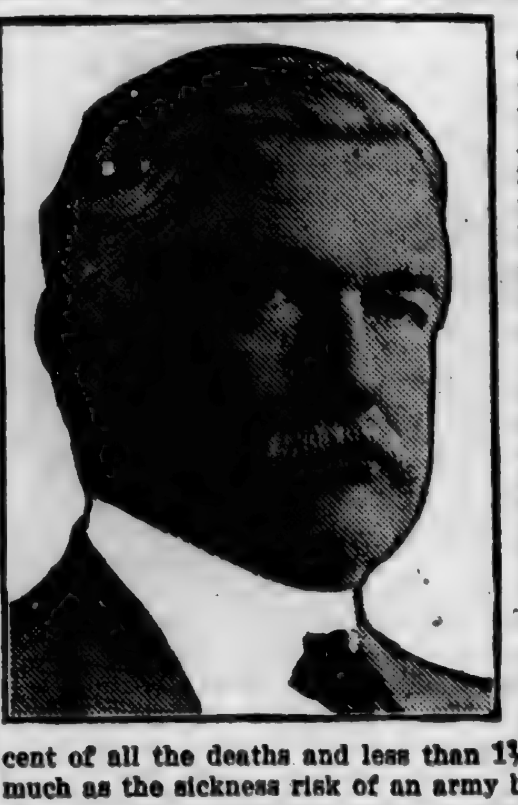
Washington, June 15.—An international army staff and international navy staff for co-ordination of military and naval operations will be created by the allied powers.

The organization of such bodies is deemed absolutely essential if the allies are to win the war. The nations fighting in league with Germany have practically surrendered their independence to Berlin.

It is at the German headquarters that the moves are planned, not only for the German fronts but for the Italian battlefields, the Balkans, Asia Minor and Persia. This unity of command has resulted in movements to hold vast bodies of enemy troops while a strenuous forward campaign was being conducted elsewhere. This scheme, it is felt, must be adopted by us.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

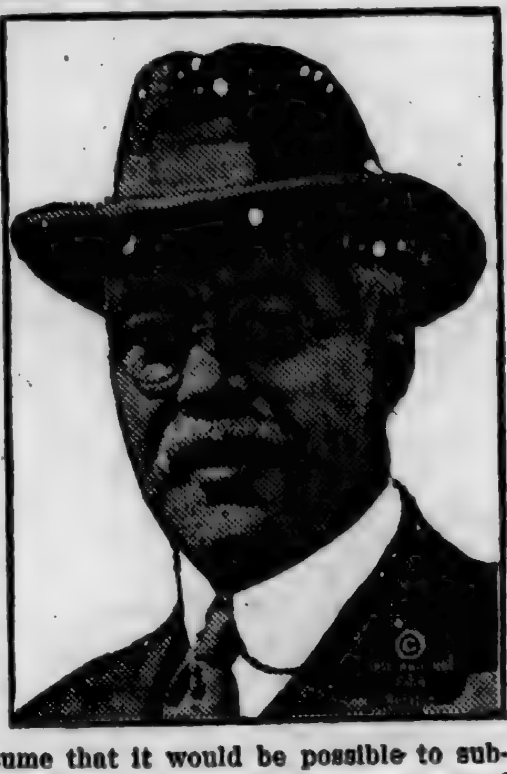
AUTHORITY ON ARMY'S HEALTH



When statistics are extreme enough one way or the other, they are capable of reassuring or disturbing the most unmathematical of persons. A striking illustration of that is found in the official figures showing the casualties of Canadian troops since the beginning of the war, which have recently been the subject of comment by Surgeon General Gorgas. The total of wounded, missing, and dead from all causes is 89,843, but the whole number of deaths from sickness in camp and trench has been only 49 officers and 1,191 men, or 1,240 all told. On the other hand, 15,829 officers and men have been killed in action and 5,242 have died of wounds, making a total of 20,871 deaths due to gunfire. To that sum should be added 1,519 of "those presumed to be dead," making the deaths from all causes 23,630.

In other words, the deaths from sickness constitute less than 5.3 per cent of all the deaths and less than 1¼ per cent of all the casualties. Inasmuch as the sickness risk of an army begins with the first gathering together of men in their earliest training camps, it is a fair thing to consider one more percentage of these casualty totals—that is, the proportion which the total deaths from sickness bear to the total number of those enlisted in Canada. This total of enlistment for the Dominion is approximately 500,000 men. So one arrives at the most reassuring conclusion that only 1 out of every 411 soldiers has succumbed to sickness in the course of nearly three years of camp and trench life combined.

BANKER EXPLAINS WAR FINANCE



In the opinion of Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City bank, the government's initial war loan of $2,000,000,000 and subsequent loans will in the main be floated through the expansion of bank credit. Mr. Vanderlip says he is confident the total issue will be subscribed when the people are once aroused to the dangers that would confront the nation if they should fail to do their duty by the government, to give their fullest financial support needed to carry on the war of democracy against Prussian militarism.

"No one with any experience with security markets or with any knowledge of the economics of investment has predicted that this loan would be oversubscribed within a week," replied Mr. Vanderlip. "There should be some education in discussing this subject as to what $2,000,000,000 means. People are apt to think of these bonds as of other ordinary issues and to assume that it would be possible to subscribe for this issue or, indeed, to subscribe for it several times over out of a fund that is awaiting investment. This war must be financed, not out of the past savings, but out of future savings. Future savings for the moment are not available, and some other device must, therefore, be brought into play. That device is bank credit, and this loan and subsequent loans will in the main be floated through an expansion of bank credit."

SCIENTIST MAKES PATRIOTIC OFFER

President Richard Cockburn MacLaurin offered to the government the services of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology the moment it was announced that President Wilson had terminated relations with Germany. This meant the services of the entire instructing staff and of all the laboratories, and they are offered with that highest efficiency of service which can be given only by an unbroken corps of trained men in laboratories of the highest standard with whose every detail they are thoroughly familiar. This is preparedness of the most important kind, for war is quite as much a struggle of skilled engineers as it is of soldiers.

President MacLaurin was born in Edinburgh, educated at Cambridge university, England; became a trustee and a dean of the University of New Zealand, and in New York, head of the department of mathematics and then of physics at Columbia. In November, 1908, he was called to Boston to be president of the M. I. T. He is a doctor of laws as well as doctor of science, and has studied the problems of education in Canada before going to New Zealand.

MAY PROVE RUSSIA'S "STRONG MAN"

A. F. Kerensky, minister of justice in Russia's revolutionary cabinet, and one of the socialist members of that body, has warned his countrymen that as affairs are going now it will be impossible to effect the salvation of Russia.

"For our faith in liberty we braved a great danger," he said in a speech to the congress of deputies from troops at the front, "but we drank of liberty until intoxicated, when we most needed sobriety and discipline.

"I have lost my daring, my faith that we are not mutinied slaves instead of conscientious citizens creating a new state. Sometimes I regret I did not die when I had faith that Russians could govern themselves without need of the knout."

If Kerensky proves to be the man for the times, Russia will not only be saved and its army rehabilitated, but the invasion of Austria will begin long before Austria is prepared to meet it, and the full drive of Russia and Italy will sweep the Austrians out of the reckoning. There is nothing impossible in this. All that is needed is that the iron hand of a true patriot who is liberal but will admit no license shall be set for freedom.

If the virile Kerensky can keep the nation together and the inspiration of the army shall be progressive until the American commission can co-operate, the might of the American dollars and the quickening of American idealism and co-operation for Russia will conclude the cementing process for the nation.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

MAKE THE MAP ALL WHITE.

O my comrades, have you heard the glorious news that's going around,
There'll very soon be no saloon on all
Columbia's ground.
There's a wave of Prohibition rolling up from every strand
And all the states it inundates
straightway become dry land.
Maine is at the head, for she has led for half a hundred years,
And Kansas great and North Dakota stand among their peers
Georgia next and Oklahoma won a place among the free,
Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina,
Tennessee.
West Virginia, and Virginia too, and Colorado's white.
Arizona then, with Washington, and
Oregon's all right.
Arkansas and Iowa came next, with
Idaho for mate,
And then came South Carolina, the old Palmetto state.
Then Michigan, who speeded up, Montana great and grand,
Nebraska's rolling prairies and South
Dakota land.
Then along came Indiana, the Hoosier
state so dear;
And Utah also said good-by to whisky,
wine and beer.
New Hampshire next, the Granite state, then sounded liquor's doom,
She sternly told John Barleycorn, "for you we have no room."
The District of Columbia, on old Potomac's shore,
Where stands our nation's capitol, will see saloons no more.
And shining o'er the polar star, Alaska's
golden light,
And all the states will follow till we make the map all white.

LICENSE AND ILLITERACY.

One of the claims of the defenders of the liquor traffic is that prohibition states have a large percentage of illiteracy than have license states. They proceed to prove it by grouping together the license states having the best showing in this respect, and against these they group Southern states such as Georgia, Mississippi and North Carolina, having a very large colored population. The illiteracy in these states comes to us as a relic of slavery days, and existed there in even a large percentage before the adoption of prohibition.

Comparing the New England states, we find that Maine—with prohibition—has the lowest percentage of illiteracy of any with the exception of Vermont, and Vermont had no licensed saloons for 50 years previous to May 1, 1903, and last year had license in only 17 towns. If prohibition promotes illiteracy, then the most illiterate states in the Union ought to be Maine, Kansas and Vermont. On the contrary there are only four states in the Union where the percentage of illiteracy is lower than in Kansas, while Maine and Vermont present the most favorable showing of the New England states.

DRY TOWNS AND COUNTIES.

That the expense of government is less in dry cities and counties is shown in the following table taken from the records of Spokane, Wash.:

Superior courts, reduction	$9,211
Poorfarm, reduction	4,099
Jail, reduction	1,267
Prosecuting attorney, reduction.	684
Honor camp, reduction	1,133
Aid county poor, reduction	2,580

A comparison of two dry counties in wet Pennsylvania tells the same story:

	Dry Greene Co.	Wet Elk Co.
Population	28,882	35,871
Boarding prisoners	$ 362	$2,247
Grand jurors	663	2,119
Penitentiary and workhouse	431	2,122
Reform schools	368	770
Commonwealth costs	1,287	3,516
Total	$3,111	$10,774
Cost per voter	$0.47	$1.84
Number of licenses	None	68

SALOON DEAD ENEMY OF LABOR.

Organized labor should be opposed to the saloon because the interests of the saloon are always opposed to the interests of the workingman.

The way to find out whether or not organized labor can afford to stand for the saloon is to find out what organized labor itself stands for, and then see how the saloon comes up to its standards.

Organized labor believes in better jobs for the workingman, in greater efficiency, in increased wages, in the abolition of child labor, in the dignity and elevation of womanhood, and in the preservation of the home.

The saloon breaks everyone of these standards.—Charles Stelzle.

AS DESTRUCTIVE AS WHISKY.

Doctor Struempell, a German physiologist of high standing, does not tolerate for a moment the suggestion that beer is less of a social enemy than other liquors. He says:

"Nothing is more erroneous from the physician's standpoint than to think of diminishing the destructive effects of alcoholism by substituting beer for other alcoholic drinks, or that the victims of drink are found only in those countries where whisky helps the people of a low grade of culture to forget their poverty and misery."

BUSINESS GOOD IN CANADA

No Financial Depression, and None Since the War Began.

A well-known correspondent of an important Western daily paper recently made an extended visit to Western Canada, and in summing up the results, after going thoroughly into conditions there, says there is no financial depression in Canada, nor has there been anything of the sort since the war began. Anyone who has watched the barometer of trade, and seen the bank clearings of the different cities grow and continue to grow will have arrived at the same conclusion. The trade statistics reveal a like situation. The progress that the farmers are making is highly satisfactory. As this correspondent says: "It is true there have been adaptations to meet new conditions, and taxes have been revised, and that a very large burden of added expense in many lines has been assumed, but it has all been done methodically, carefully and with full regard for the resources to be called on.

"That this has been done fairly and wisely is proved by the present comfortable financial position.

"With the exception of a restricted area in the east, Canada is not an industrial country. The greater portion of the Dominion must be classed as agricultural area, with only an infinitesimal part of it fully developed.

"Lacking complete development, the agricultural portion of Canada has naturally placed its main dependence upon fewer resources than would be the case in the States. Even in peace times, business would be subject to more frequent and wider fluctuations, due to the narrower foundation upon which it rests.

"Thus, Canada has been able to come up to the war with efficiency and sufficiency and to maintain and even advance its civilian activities.

"Canada's first element of financial strength lay in its branch bank system. This system has two great advantages: it makes the financial resources of the Dominion fluid so that supplies of capital can run quickly from the high spots to the low spots; also, it places at the command of each individual branch the combined resources of the whole institution so that there is an efficient safeguard against severe strain at any one point.

"Here in Winnipeg, the all-Canada banking houses maintain big, strong branches and, as elsewhere in the Dominion, these held to an attitude of saneness and solidity that prevented even the start of any financial disturbance.

That business generally is now coming strong on an even keel is largely due to the absolute refusal of the banks, both branch and independent, to exhibit the slightest signs of excitement or apprehensiveness.

"For all Canada the savings bank figures are astonishing. Beginning with 1913, they are, for the fiscal year ending March 31:

1913	$622,928,968
1914	663,650,230
1915	683,761,432
1916	738,169,212
1917	888,765,698

"These figures represent what Canadians have put away after paying the increased living cost, which is about the same as in the States, all increases in taxes and imports of all kinds made necessary by the war and generous subscriptions to war bond issues.

"Prohibition has helped greatly in keeping the money supplies circulating in the normal, necessary channels. Tradesmen generally attribute a large part of the good financial condition to the fact that the booze bill has been eliminated. Canada takes law enforcement with true British seriousness.

"Financially, as in every other respect, Canada has developed sufficiency. She has done it in spite of initial conditions which would not look promising in the States and she has done it in a big, strong way.

"One of the best things we did," said one of the leading Winnipeg bankers to me, "was to decide early in the game that we simply would not borrow trouble.

"We started in ignorance of how the war would develop and without knowing exactly what our resources were, and had to find the way.

"And yet Canadians are not overburdened with taxes nor are they complaining of them. For the common people there has been but a slight tax increase, if any, in a direct way. Indirect payments, of course, are made in the shape of higher prices for living commodities, but the price advance on such items is no heavier than in the States in the same period."—Advertisement.

CLIMBED STAIRS ON HER HANDS

Too Ill to Walk Upright. Operation Advised. Saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

This woman now raises chickens and does manual labor. Read her story:

Richmond, Ind.—"For two years I was so sick and weak with troubles from my age that when going up stairs I had to go very slowly with my hands on the steps, then sit down at the top to rest. The doctor said he thought I should have an operation, and my friends thought I would not live to move into our new house. My daughter asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had taken it with good results. I did so, my weakness disappeared, I gained in strength, moved into our new home, did all kinds of garden work, shoveled dirt, did building and cement work, and raised hundreds of chickens and ducks. I cannot say enough in praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and if these facts are useful you may publish them for the benefit of other women."—Mrs. M. O. When the Statue Nodded.

Before he attained to the front rank in his profession, Fred Kitchen, the famous comedian, used to tour Europe in an acrobatic turn with a partner named Royal.

One week they were at the Eldorado theater, Naples, and after the performance they went for a stroll along the famous embankment, known as the Waterfront.

"Pretty soon," said Fred, in telling the story, "we reached a statue, and lo! it nodded gravely toward us.

"'Did you see that statue nod?' said my partner.

"'I certainly did,' said I.

"'Well,' said he, 'I'm going back to the hotel and to bed before I get run in. It's that confounded Capri wine.'

"So, ashamed of ourselves, back we went, and sneaked up to bed.

"But at breakfast time next morning both of us seemed to be amazingly fresh considering our dissipation of the night before, and we could not understand why we had such good appetites until the waiter said:

"'Did the gentlemen feel last night's slight earthquake?'"

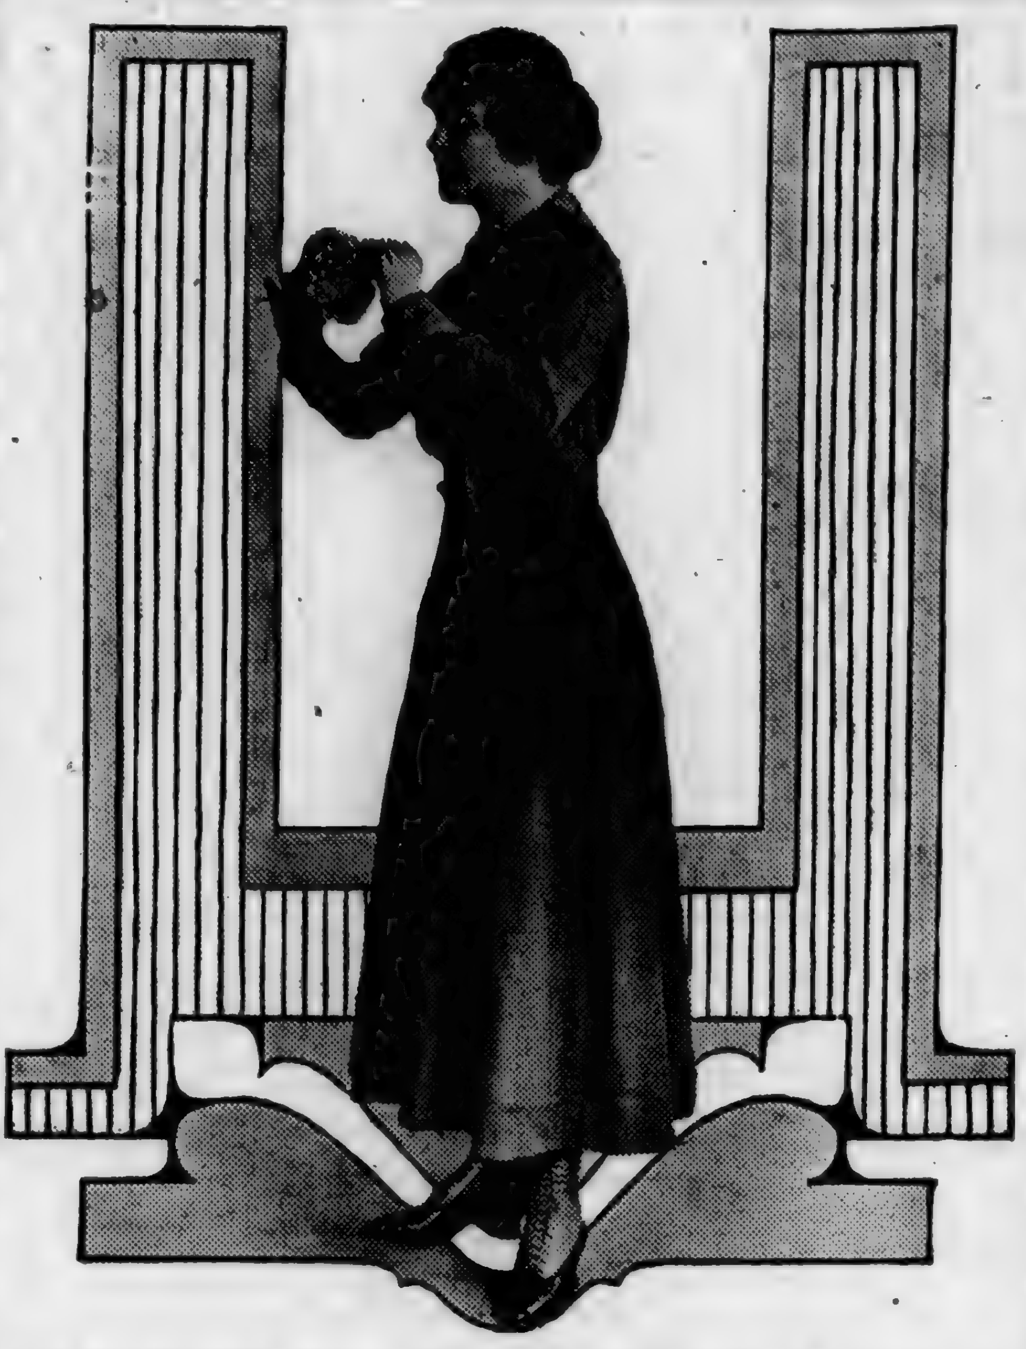
Utility and House Dresses



Let the day bring what it will in work or play, the utility dress is equal to occasion. It is plain and strong and shapely and these are all it needs to be for general wear at home or a sojourn in the country. It is usually made like the house dress or like aprons, of fairly heavy, washable cottons, but if the sort of wear to be given, it will save it from tubbing, serge or other durable woolens make a happy choice of material.

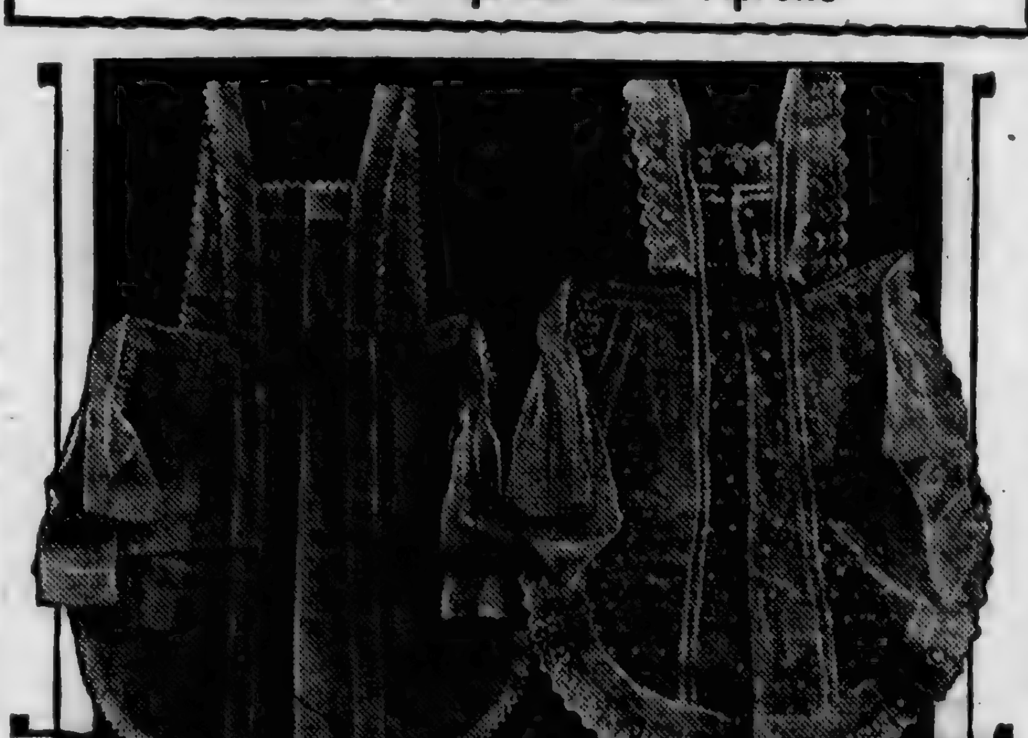
A serge frock, made like the model pictured, takes no thought of any sort of decoration, and is good for all sorts of wear. But if its owner chose to make it an all-day garb, slipped into in the morning and not slipped out of until bedtime, it will accommodate itself to an organdie collar and cuffs, or even tolerate these furbelows in Swiss embroidery and organdie for afternoon or an evening at home.

Whether of wool or cotton, it is made in one piece with plain skirt set on to a blouse under a belt of the material. The blouse fastens with snap fasteners at the front and the belt with actual buttonholes and buttons, covered with the material also. A second button on the belt proclaims that just once the frock forgot to be rigidly self-denying—one might have answered, but not so well as two. The skirt opens a little to the left of the front and closes with snap fasteners.

House dresses of percale and aprons in stripes, helped out by pockets and pipings in plain colors require to devote themselves to being simply dresses and nothing more. They are dresses that demonstrate how pretty pipings and pockets may be and how much style they can contribute to the least experience of all frocks. They sell for less than two dollars, sometimes, the clever designing being thrown in without price. They have round, square and V-shaped necks, and are made with short kimono sleeves, and all in one piece.

To go back to the merely useful, trouser dresses and bloomer dresses, are to be reckoned with for indoor and outdoor wear, in the place of utility dresses. They promise to become a recognized fixture in the wardrobe.

There Are Aprons and Aprons



There is quite a variety in aprons, designed for different occupations in the business of everyday life. All the way from the trim, overall apron that bespeaks efficiency and neatness in housework, to the little and frivolous tea aprons that suggest leisure and cosy hospitality, this regalia of the home meets the needs of each hour. Kitchen and housework aprons make a story by themselves. All the rest may be classed together to make another story.

First there are the pretty tea aprons in which the hostess who serves her guests signifies her intentions of doing just this.

The pretty fashion for having the young daughters of the house serve at informal tea, refuses to become obsolete, the tea apron is destined to flourish a long time. It is a little affair of fine voile or batiste or dotted swiss, or handkerchief linen, organdie—in fact, any material that is fine and sheer enough to be dainty. And it is trimmed with lingerie laces, or swiss embroidery or hand embroidery, and decked out with gay satin ribbons in light colors. It may be made of white net and it is bibless, but is allowed one or two enchanting pockets as a compensation.

The tea apron is small, dainty and trimmed with lacy things and ribbons. It makes a pretty gift. Much like it are "fudge aprons," but they are less trimmed and larger. A new model in this particular variety is made of a single narrow width of goods extending from the shoulder to the knees, joined to a backpiece having a belt attached, that extends about the waist and buttons to one side of the front. This is to be donned when the chafing dish makes its appearance or fudge-making is the order of the day.

Serving aprons, like those shown in the pictures, are for maids' wear. They are of light materials and trimmed with embroideries or finished with embroidered scallops or fancy braid.

Ribbon Edges Hat Brims.

At a recent gathering of smartly dressed women side plaitings of narrow grosgrain ribbon were noticed on many of the hats as a brim extension or facing on a Breton and again as a smart cockade effect. Flowers and fruits were by no means neglected, used either as whole crowns or bunched tightly together high at the crown front of a large shape. For instance, one large mushroom sided shape covered in navy georgette had a large oval at the crown front made of crimson cherries in the center and the cherry foliage evenly branched all around the oval.

Art of Perfuming.

Two or three tiny balls of cotton wool sprinkled with the desired perfume and concealed in the hem of the garment; sleeping in a cap, the crown of which is a sachet; sprinkling the hearts of artificial flowers upon a hat; keeping gloves and veils in boxes between sheets of blotting powder saturated freshly every few days—these are the means by which a refined woman surrounds herself with an intangible perfume that is always delightful.

GOIN' AFTER MUSKY,

My Dear Buck:

So you're out for the big ones, the "tiger" of the waters, the great old rascal that makes 'em all sit up and doff the lid. You've bassed, trouted, and pickerel and panned a bit, now you feel like taking a whirl at the boss of the tribe, caused no doubt by the many tales that have been spun about this Villa of the weedbeds. No matter, old man, how harrowing the tale, the muskellunge is guilty of everything that has been said about him.

Where to Find Him.

His favorite haunt is in about 5 to 15 feet of water near the weeds, water lilies or grasses that grow in the water, or alongside of submerged rocks. He is a solitary fellow, don't make any friends, just lies around waiting for a piece of food to go swimming by, then he makes a lightninglike dart, snaps his powerful jaws shut on his victim and swims back to his station and gorges the eats, ready in a minute to take another foray. He always strikes a fish or lure sideways, and there is no special time when he is feeding, fact is he seems to be hungry all the time, but he is more active from eight to eleven in the morning and from four until dark. When the water is slightly roughened by the wind and breaking in small waves or an overcast day, is good musky weather, but he may surprise you and strike your lure while you are trolling into shore to make a landing for the noonday lunch.

The Best Time.

Musky fishing is very good in June, unless the season is extremely cold and backward, towards the tail end of July it slows up considerably, while August is the poorest month for the big chief. During "dog days" his teeth are in poor shape and you can hardly coax a strike out of him unless he feels so down in the mouth and mean that he strikes from pure cussedness. Like a snake shedding its skin and the deer its horns, the musky loses its teeth in August, but nature packs in a new set by the first of September and the old boy is in a fine fighting humor for that month. By far the best musky fishing is to be had in September and October, when the chill night air seems to fill them with an extra supply of pep for the food hunt the next day. Even up into November is not too late for the big ones, but for downright good musky fishing it is hard to beat September and October.

Troll and Cast.

In the past most of the boys have contented themselves with trolling for the musky, but the real sport of the game is to cast for them, using the same method as that of casting for bass. In trolling for musky a silk braided line of 20 to 30 pounds test is about right, while a six-thread Cuttyhunk linen line is preferred by some. For a trolling lure the spoon hook holds first place and is no doubt the best little all-round bait. Use a chub, shiner, black sucker or pork rind with a spoon as an added attraction, and if this don't seem to make 'em curious, put a strip of red flannel about six inches long on the hooks and let that wiggle through the water a bit as an enticer. Some mighty fine ones have been caught with this rig. Most beginners load the line with a whopping big spoon, even up to No. 12 size. Keep her down, old man, to a No. 4 or No. 6 for the single spoon, and No. 3 or No. 4 for the tandem style. For a good stiff rod for the beginner make it a steel one, and the five footer will fill the bill for either casting or trolling for the musky. Of course if you are a double-dyed expert you can use your lighter rod and tackle, but unless one is an expert at handling the lighter tackle he had better stick to the slightly heavier stuff and feel more sure of the fish. A musky can sure make a fine outfit look like a junk shop if it's handled by an inexperienced fisherman. Troll in water about 8 to 12 feet deep, off the edges of the weedbeds and over the underwater weeds; also off the rock beds and points of land as well as quiet coves and bays. Keep your rod straight out behind the boat; if you hold it out over the side you put a strain on it that is unnecessary and bad medicine for any rod.

In casting for the musky keep the boat about 50 feet off the casting waters, moving the boat as noiselessly as possible and casting in towards the shore or feeding grounds. An all white or white and red head artificial minnow, or spoon and pork rind, frog or minnow makes a good casting lure. From the strike the fight is fast and gamy and you sure must keep the slack out of the line or he'll do a flop out of the water and corkscrew back on your line, which means farewell to the musky.

DIXIE.

The Whole Gamut.

Mayor Mitchel said at a dinner in New York:

"Insurance rates, now that we're at war, will naturally go up. I heard the other day about a young fellow who went to an insurance agent and said:

"'I'd like to take out a policy, please.'

"'Very good, sir,' said the agent. 'Sit down and have a cigar. Now, then, what kind of a policy do you want to take out—life, fire, burglary, accident, murder, drowning, assassination or marine?'

"'I'll take the whole caboodle of them,' said the young man. 'I'm going to try to cross to England through the U-boat blockade.'"

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

What Could He Do?

The Monon passenger car was filed and when a stop was made at a small way station a man and woman boarded it.

Mr. S., who was occupying a seat by himself, arose and offered the woman a seat. She accepted, but when Mr. S. resumed his seat she remarked: "I prefer my husband to sit by me, if you please."

When asked what he did, Mr. S. replied: "Well, what could I do but comply?"—Indianapolis News.

Lady—Why, I don't believe I know, exactly, but he wears a fifteen shirt.

"Doans Saved My Life"

"I Had Given Up Hope" Says Mr. Dent, "But Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Me Permanently."

Mr. Dent

"My kidney trouble began with backache, which ran on about a year," says W. H. Dent, 2213 Reynolds Street, Brunswick, Ga. "My back got so I was at times unable to sleep, even in a chair. Often the pain bent me double. I would be prostrated and someone would have to move me. Uric acid got into my blood and I began to break out. This got so bad I went to a hospital for treatment. I stayed there three months, but got but little better. Dropsy set in and I bloated until nearly half again my size. My knees were so swollen the flesh burst in strips. I lay there panting, and just about able to catch my breath. I had five doctors; each one said it was impossible for me to live.

"I hadn't taken Doan's Kidney Pills long before I began to feel better. I kept on and was soon able to get up. The swelling gradually went away and when I had used eleven boxes I was completely cured. I have never had a bit of trouble since. I owe my life and my health to Doan's Kidney Pills."

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or lars, they said, is the amount asked of the people of the nation for the work of the Red Cross. Of this, DeKalb county is asked to contribute $7,800 and the Spencer auxiliary's share is $368.59. An executive committeee has been appointed for the county, Rev. Mumma being the member for this section, one of whose duties is the raising of money. He immediately got busy; and early Monday morning had eleven committees, one for each square mile, out soliciting.

The Spencer auxiliary organized by the election of the following officers: Chairman, C. G. Rectenwall; vice chairman, Mrs. Mabel Erick; secretary, Mrs. J C Emme; treasurer, Clyde E. Hart. After the campaign for money has been completed, a canvass for members will

CONCORD TOWNSHIP

A meeting was held at the M. P. church, St. Joe last Thursday evening for the purpose of organizing a Red Cross auxiliary for Concord and the north half of Newville townships. Judge Link, of Auburn, made a patriotic address, urging his hearers to organize for the great purpose of doing their share in the national crisis. He also outlined the object of the Red Cross society.

The auxiliary was organized and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. C. R. Price; vice president, Mrs. Mellie Perry; secretary, Mrs. Winnie Shook; treasurer, S. W. Tustison. The president has appointed two committees to assist in the work of perfecting the organization. They are:

Finance.—C. A. Patterson, F. R. Bowman and Frank Johnson.

Membership.—Mesdames F. R. Bowman, Arline Koch and Dell Draggoo and Messrs. L. W. Yeiser and H. M. Widney.

These committees will not begin work until after the allotment of the war fund ($435.27) has been raised. Work on this is under way under the direction of the executive officer for Concord township. Dr. Price, E. R. Kinsey, S. W. Tustison, Charles Koch, Frank Johnson, F. R. Bowman, J. W. Sherer, Rev. Spayd and Rev. Hively. C. A Patterson is the executive.

The membership fee to all auxiliaries is $1.00. This is separate from the war fund. Half goes to the national Red Cross and the balance is used at home.

The people of St. Joe are long-suffering; but they are being and have been imposed upon. They know their rights and on several occasions have asserted them successfully, bringing the B. & O. to terms each time; and they may do so again. If The News has been correctly informed, they have ample ground for demanding better train service. The information is to the effect that an additional plug has been put on between Garrett and Chicago. If this be true, the excuse that the train was taken off this part of the road to facilitate the movement of troops and freight falls flat. The matter will bear investigation.

Wilson Sanders and wife motored to Garett, Sunday, and spent the day with Job Smith and wife. Geo. Kinsey, wife and two daughters accompanied them as far as Auburn and visited with Charles Jenkihs and wife.

Now that the registration is past, it would be a good time for young men to enlist before they are conscripted. However, there is no dishonor in being drafted. It is a law that will treat all alike, and one that no one need fear the result.

Civic Club Is Formed

At a meeting held at the Christian church last Friday evening, a Civic League was formed. There was a good crowd, and an interesting and profitable meeting was held. The following officers were elected:

Executive Committee, the chairman of which is ex-officio president of the League.—Dr. B. S. Sheffer, chairman; Mrs. C. A. Patterson, John George, Mrs. H. M. Widney, Mrs. L. W. Spayd

Secretary-Treasurer.—Mrs. F. B. Leighty.

The League adjourned to meet in two weeks—Friday evening, June 29—at the M. P. church.

The object of the organization is to study the existing constitution of Indiana, with a view to intelligent voting at the September election, when delegates to a constitutional convention will be chosen. The move originated among the ladies of the W. C. T. U., they desiring to acquaint themselves with the duties connected with their newly acquired citizenship. Other ladies desired to meet with them, and the result was that everybody was invited to attend. Besides being of an instructive character, the League promises to be interesting. There are no dues nor initiatory fee.

The executive committee, at a meeting held at Dr. Sheffer's office Monday evening, made out the following program for June 29:

Song.—Indiana."

Devotional —Led by Rev. Spayd.

"Religious Liberty as Embodied in the First Seven Sections of the Present Constitution," Rev. A. K. Mumma.

Paul Perry In Wisconsin

Alva Perry unexpectedly heard from his son, Paul, who was among the first to enlist from this place, on Sunday. He was at the B. and O. station when No. 7, westbound, passed through. He caught a glimpse of Paul at one of the windows as the train passed The young man threw out a card announcing that he was on his way to Sparta, Wis. Mr. Perry had had no intimation that his son was to be moved from Fort Myers, Va. Gray Woodcox, Mervin Place, and Roy Haifley are still at Fort Myers.

A postal card from Paul Krabill, received by his parents, announces that he is at Fort Thomas, Ky., but he expects to leave for Leavenworth Kan., soon. He says that he is kept busy learning wireless telegraphy, wig-wagging and signaling.

Potato Blight

The agricultural bulletin board in the DeKalb county court house has some valuable information regarding the potato blight. This is one of the most dangerous diseases of the plant life and can be overcome successfully by the treatment of bordeaux mixture. County Agent A. Z. Arehart advises that this be used for about three applications at intervals of about two weeks. The county agent also says to add a little paris green for the bugs while making the application and thus save extra labor later on. This remedy is easily applied and will help raise a better quality of potatoes.

TWO INDIANA WOMEN MAY BE CANDIDATES FOR CONVENTION

Indianapolis, June 14.—Two women of Indiana will probably be invited by the democratic state central committee to be candidates for delegates to the constitutional convention which will be held next year, it was learned today.

The women who will probably be asked to make the race are Mrs. Albion Fellows Bacon of Evansville, and Mrs. J. R. Edwards of Peru. The matter will be decided at a meeting of the committee tomorrow. Women of the state will vote for the first time at the election of delegates to the constitutional convention.

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JUNE 28 1917 NO. 26

Picture of the Madonna

Miss Princess Krabill has hanging in the parlor of her home a picture of which she is justly proud. It is an oil painting of the Madonna, with the infant Savior in her arms. The writer is no art critic, consequently he can not employ technical terms in describing the work; but he can say truthfully that it looks very good to him. There is expression and loveliness in the two faces, and that of the Holy Mother portrays pride and love. There is naturalness about the draping of the woman and the poise of her form; and there is art in the depiction of the heavenly light that falls over the two.

The canvas is about 3x5 feet, and is an enlargement of a small model not to exceed 2 inches square. Hence, the work of proportioning the painting was done by Miss Krabill. Six months' time was spent on the work.

Miss Rrabill has two more paintings at her home. The first represents a number of wild horses fleeing before a forest fire and the second a dog's head. These show her advancement in painting, as the difference between her first effort and the Madonna is so marked that even the veriest amateur can not but notice it.

Miss Krabill possesses artistic talent of a hign degree.

Origin of the Lord's Day

Rev. Spayd preached an interesting sermon at the Christian church Sunday, his theme being "The Lord's Day," in which he gave reasons for the change from the old Jewish Sabbath to Sunday. This is a subject little understood, which added to the interest of the discourse. The speaker handled the queestion so ably and adduced so much proof in favor of his contention that he carried conviction to his hearers.

In the first place, Rev. Spayd proved by Scripture that the Israelites observed the seventh day by Divine command, citing the commandments and Isaiah lvi, 4. The Lord sanctified the day because it commemorated the completion of the work of creation. This became the Jewish Sabbath.

What became of the Sabbath? It was taken out of the way and nailed to the cross, together with all the Old Testament ordinances. In proof of this, Rev. Spayd quoted the words of St. Paul: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way and nailed it to the cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat or in drink or in respect of an holyday or of the new moon or of Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come" (Col. ii, 14-17). St. Paul further says: "For I testify again to every man that is circumcised that he is debtor to the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the old law" (Gal. v, 3-4). In other words, the observance of any part of the old law makes Christ of no effect.

Which is the Lord's day now since the old law was taken away? None, by Divine command. Our Lord's day is sanctified by dedication. It is holy because the early church dedicated it in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ.

The speaker closed with an exhortation to any of his hearers who were not Christians to make a start.

Queer how fast men are aging these days! There are twice as many over thirty-one years of age as there were a year ago. Others, those under twenty-one, age slowly. If the was last long enough, it will be no uncommon thing to see boys of forty wearing knickerbockers or grandfathers among high school graduates.

The greatest happifier is making others happy. Hence, the man who lives for himself alone robs himself. The person with money to spare who is blind to the misfortune of others or has no public spirit is a failure: his money may win for him the smile and good word of the obsequious (to his face), but he has no real warm friends; and he is distrustful of all. He isolates himself from others money grabbing—lives disrespected and dies unregretted. He is to be pitied.

After yelling "Hello!" over one of public serve-us uselessilities until he has exhausted his patience and temper, isn't a man justified in hanging up the receiver and repeating the call without adding the final "o?" "The line's busy," but not so busy as the party who is talking to someone two miles away and has to yell loud enough to be heard in Ashantee or Borioboola-Gha; and when he has finished, be encourged by a faint "Hello!" from the other end to "whoop 'er up" again.

War sounds the depth of a man's patriotism. There are no ways, in times of peace, of judging the sincerity of his patriotic professions; but when the time for action comes, there can be no concealment of his position. When a nation engages in war, every man should do his part. Everyone can not carry a gun, but everyone can do something. It's a time for sacrifice, both on the battle field and at home. One man hazards his life for his country, stands ready to make the supreme sacrifice. At such a time, how poor an American is he who will not sacrifice a few paltry dollars! He should give of his means and give liberally and cheerfully, thankful for the opportunity of helping those who wear the uniform of his country.

The spirit of the Fourth of July does not win battles. On that day, the people of America are subject to an attack of patriotic hysteria—of a harmless character, however. This manifests itself in parades, hurrahing and various kinds of noisy imbecility. There are orators and orations, and patriots wax red faced and perspire while telling in flamboyant language of the glory and might of Uncle Sam. Then comes the final stage of the disease, in which the patient squares himself, assumes the attitude of one about to deliver a knockout blow and challenges the whole world. "Come on, we can lick all of you!" This yearly hallucination tickles the vanity of the American people and does no permanent injury. On the other hand, it does no good. But the time has come for this foolishness to cease. What is needed today is the spirit of 1776. The time has come for serious thought and action and sacrifice. Chauvinistic bragging about our might will not do—that might must be aroused and put into action by men who are guided by judgment instead of by impulse. It is not patriotism to underestimate the enemy. That is dangerous. The success of the war depends upon a full knowledge of the task and no inflated idea of our own power.

"All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. xxvi, 52). The words of the Savior, just quoted, were meant as a rebuke to Peter; but it is easy to see that they are general in their application and have no limit as to time, meaning the people of today the same as those of the time when they were spoken. They mean that a nation of conquerors shall perish by conquest, which is simply retributive justice. The empire of Alexander the Great, founded prior to Christ's time, perished by the sword; and subsequent history bears out His words: no conqueror ever built up a kingdom that was enduring and did not end by violence. Rome, that ruled the world, was overrun and destroyed by barbarians. The empire of Charlemagne did not survive his death, but was rent to pieces by internal wars. The meteoric career of Napoleon, who forced princes to become his vassals, terminated ingloriously at Waterloo. In the light of these facts, the question may well be asked, is history repeating itself and is the greatest bully of modern times, Prussia, perishing by her own weapon, the sword? The foundation of the kingdom was laid in the Fifteenth century when a prince of Hohenzollern (descendant of a robber baron) became ruler of the mark of Brandenburg, a German province. No more aggressive and ruthless line of princes ever ruled. From that day to this, they have extended their dominions by the sword in the same spirit that they invaded and are now trying to hold inoffensive Belgium. They had part in one of the greatest crimes in history, the partition of Poland; when Austria was divided on the question of having a female ruler, they forcibly annexed Silesia; when Sweden became weak, they robbed her of Pomerania. In 1866, they robbed defenseless Denmark of Schleswig-Holstein, joining with Austria to do so; and in the war over the spoils that followed, held the Danish provinces and drove from their thrones four German princes—the king of Hanover and the dukes of Nassau, Hesse-Cassel and Hessen Homberg—and annexed their respective territories. In addition to these, they seized the free city of Frankfurt. In 1870, France was forced to give up Alsace-Lorraine; and now Germany, dominated by Prussia, is engaged in the most unholy war in her history and employing means so inhuman and barbarous that they would arouse the envy of a savage. Can it be that the Divine prophecy, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword," is being fulfilled in the case of Prussia? Can it be that the shadow of St. Helena hangs over the last of the Hohenzollerns?

The Wabash station was broken into Monday night. The whole place was ransacked; but only a dozen eggs and some copper were taken, the thieves evidently being after money. The local Sherlock Holmes got busy the first thing and proceeded to do some "detecitive" work. In this, he was rewarded by discovering two tramps breakfasting by the railwayside; and—damning evidence—they were stowing away eggs as only millionaires can afford to do these days. The deduction was easy—dead easy: the tramps were guilty. Watson was not there with his applauding "Wonderful!" but our citizens heard of the "detecitive's" efforts and sent for Sheriff Baltz. That officer came and took the hoboes in charge. Deduction is all right when it happens to be all right, but the facts knocked the "detecitive's" deductions into smithereens. The tramps proved alibi for the eggs—they came from Ed. Leighty's grocery and not from the Wabash station. Meanwhile, mystery—deep, dark, dingy mystery—surrounds the most appaling crime of the twentieth century.

Fourth of July celebrations in Indiana cities are going to be rather tame affairs from a fireworks standpoint, according to reports reaching the office of the state fire marshal. Practically all of the common councils have passed ordinances prohibiting the use of fireworks on patriotic grounds. It is contended that the country is at war and that there should be but little waste of money or powder in fireworks.

Raise the Allotment

Take off your hat to Spencer, Newville and Concord townships! And don't forget DeKalb county.

The spirit of 1776 still survives!

Spencer and south Newville's allotment of the Red Cross war fund was $305 58 and $764 25 was raised; and Concord and north Newville came across with $896, when only $435.28 was asked. In other words, the three townships were allotted $740.86 and gave $1,660.25, or $919.39 more than their share—twice as much and $178.53 over.

DeKalb county started out to raise $7,600. "Pshaw! that's too easy!" said her people. "Here, Uncle Sam, take $14,200 69."

Aren't you glad you live in DeKalb county.

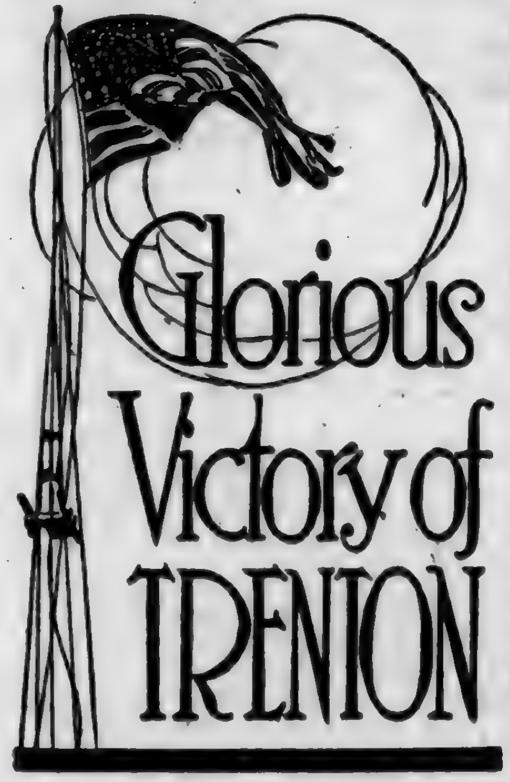
The Glorious Fourth

The dawn of the Fourth—the old annual story—
The nervous man's dread and the small boy's glory,
The east is yet gray when all the land rumbles,
And the small cannon pops and the big cannon grumbles,
And the torrid sun creeps through a blue haze of powder,
And the torpedoes snap and the cannons boom louder—
On the Fourth of July—
The old-fashioned Fourth of July.



Glorious Victory of TRENTON

The winter night is cold and drear,
Along the river's sullen flow;
The cruel frost is camping here—
The air has living blades of snow.
Look! pushing from the icy strand,
With ensigns freezing in the air,
There sails a small, but mighty band,
Across the dang'rous Delaware.

A rush—a shout—a clarion call,
Salute the early morning's gray;
Now, roused invaders, yield, or fall;
The worthy land has won the day!
Soon shall the glorious news be hurled,
Wherever men have wrongs to bear;
For freedom's torch illumes the world,
And God has crossed the Delaware!
—Will Carleton.

THE winter of 1776, the year of the glorious Declaration of Independence, found the fortunes of the budding nation at their lowest ebb. Beaten, buffeted and broken, the little army of George Washington had been pushed beyond the Delaware. He had scarce 4,000 men to command, while Cornwallis and Howe, the British commanders, had six times that many scattered over New Jersey and New York.

Many Americans were becoming disgusted with the war. Even Washington's troops were disheartened and he faced the calamity of having all but 1,500 of them quit the service the first of the year, when their enlistment expired. To make matters worse, General Gates and some other high officers in the army were trying to influence congress against Washington. They used every argument they could to discredit their leader.

Brilliant Strategy.

But while almost the entire country was losing heart, Washington was planning a brilliant stroke to revive the patriotism of the people and the enthusiasm of his troops. He determined to strike a blow at the British forces in New Jersey, a dangerous thing to do, one must admit, when it is remembered that he was outnumbered six to one.

He was too wise a man to risk battle with the main British force. He decided to attack one of the detachments occupying the various cities of New Jersey. After careful deliberation he selected Trenton as the point to be stormed. It was nearest his own position across the river and the majority of the troops there were Hessians, German soldiers England had hired to fight in America. Cornwallis and Howe had gone to New York with their staffs, where social life and gayety was at a higher pitch than in the little New Jersey towns.

Left Trail of Blood.

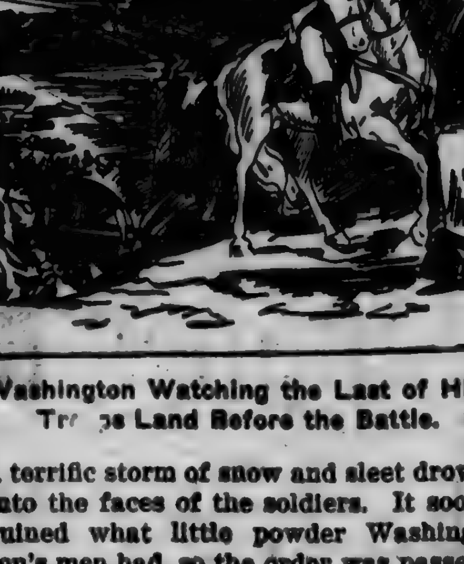
Washington's plan was to cross the river Christmas night with a body of picked troops, a time when he thought the German commander, Colonel Rahl, and his officers and men would be carousing. He assembled the attacking force quietly on his side of the river.

Some of the troops Washington had ordered to join him failed to arrive at the crossing point in time. But despite that disappointment Washington pushed on. He determined to make the attack with the column he had accompanied. Washington's troops were so poorly clad on the march that day that a courier from General Gates in Philadelphia was able to trail Washington's force by bloody footprints in the snow. When men key their courage to that point nothing can stop them.

Patriots' Powder Spoiled.

Delay at the ferry made an attack before daylight impossible. Washington had hoped to surprise the British and Hessians. The river was filled with floating ice and it looked for a time as if most of the little army might be drowned in crossing. But fortune smiled on them and none was lost.

Once on the New Jersey side, at a point about nine miles from Trenton, a terrific storm of snow and sleet drove into the faces of the soldiers. It soon ruined what little powder Washington's men had, so the order was passed to rely on the bayonet. Washington divided his men into two columns, one under General Sullivan and one under General Greene. They were to march by different roads and attack the British outposts simultaneously.



Washington Watching the Last of His Tr[illegible]ps Land Before the Battle.

"Advance and Charge!"

General Sullivan became somewhat dubious about the outcome while on the march and sent a messenger to Washington to ask what should be done. "Advance and charge," was Washington's succinct reply. Washington said in his report the next day that he might have retreated at this time had he thought he could have crossed the river without being discovered by the British.

It was nearly eight o'clock before the American advance met the first British outposts. The latter were attacked quickly and driven back on the town without trouble. A rattle of musketry from the outposts announced the beginning of the battle. Wayne Whipple says in his "Life of Washington" that the Americans were so mad that morning that they would have attacked the British with broomsticks.

Washington's surmise about Colonel Rahl and his officers was correct. They had spent the night at the home of Abraham Hunt, drinking and making merry. Hunt had furnished them an elaborate Christmas supper. While the supper was in progress, late that night, a negro servant entered the room and gave Colonel Rahl a note. The latter thrust it in his pocket without looking at it. It was fortunate for America that he was too drunk to act properly, for that note was from a Tory warning him of Washington's approach.

Hessian Colonel Killed.

While the officers drank and sang Washington's men had fought their way into the outskirts of the town. The British cannon was captured and trained down the streets on their former owners. The sound of firing brought realization of the danger to Colonel Rahl and he rushed from the Hunt house to form his men. He was a brave man, but he had stayed too long at his merrymaking. More than a thousand Hessians had surrendered already. Colonel Rahl rallied some men and made a show of resistance. Almost the first fire wounded him mortally.

When the Hessians saw their commander fall, some of them started to retreat toward Princeton. But Washington sent a detachment to head them off and they soon surrendered.

Long before noon the Americans were in possession of the entire city and the British and Hessian prisoners were being transported across the river for safe-keeping. Washington sent couriers to congress with the joyful news. It spread quickly over the country and enthused the cause of liberty so well that Washington was able to hold his army together and face the British in the spring with determination and courage.

FARMS THE SOURCE OF WEALTH

Careful Tillage, Good Management and a Beneficent Soil.

Reading the reports of the managers of the chartered banks in Canada, one is struck by the wonderful showing that they have made during the past two or three years. They are careful in their statements, and while they attribute the success that they have met with, together with that which has followed other lines of business, they are careful to emphasize the fact that the condition of big business may not continue. On the other hand, they point out that the material and fundamental source of wealth is the farm. While other lines of business may have their setbacks, and while care and scrupulous care, will have to be exercised to keep an even balance, there is but little risk to the farmer who on economic and studied lines will carry on his branch of industry and endeavor to produce what the world wants not only today, but for a long distance into the future, with a greater demand than ever in the past.

Speaking recently before a Canadian bank board at its annual meeting, the vice president, once a farmer himself, said:

"The farm is the chief source of wealth. We have now three transcontinental railways with branches running through thousands of miles of the very best undeveloped agricultural land in the world. In the natural course of things, these must attract immigration. The products of the farm are now commanding the highest prices ever known, and in my opinion even after the end of the war, high prices for foodstuffs must continue to prevail. With the mechanical appliances now available for farm work, the farmer needs no considerable supply of extra capital, but should be helped to the extent needed upon good security. The food supply of the world is short, the demand is likely to increase rather than decrease. Development of mines, extension of factories and the reconstruction of devastated Europe must all call for supplies for the workers. On the whole, the farmer has been helped rather than hurt by the war, and will continue to be, at least for a long time to come."

Many men of authority and intelligence support what the vice president has said, and their statements are borne out by the facts that readily present themselves. The different grain-producing countries of Europe have been robbed of the man power that developed their agriculture, the farms have been devastated and laid waste. Full and complete reliance will have to be placed on the United States and Canada, and from what we see today, it will take the combined forces of these two countries to come anywhere near meeting the cry that will go out for food. The warnings and appeals sent out by the heads of these two countries are none too soon nor too urgent. Therefore, it becomes necessary for those who can produce to exert themselves. Secure land, rent it, buy it. Get it somewhere, some way, and have it operated. The Canadian Government, sending out its appeal, is not selfish in this matter. Thousands of acres in the United States await the tiller's efforts, and none of it should be idle. Canada, too, offers wonderful advantages, with its free lands and its low-priced lands, to those desirous of helping the nation, and improving their own condition at the same time. Many are taking advantage of this wonderful opportunity.—Advertisement.

CHAPTER XVI.

Professor McGill.

Red Gold City was ripe for a night of relaxation. There had been some gambling, a few fights and enough liquor to create excitement now and then, but the presence of the mounted police had served to keep things unusually tame compared with events a few hundred miles farther north, in the Dawson country. The entertainment proposed by Sandy McTrigger and Jan Harker met with excited favor. The news spread for twenty miles about Red Gold City and there had never been greater excitement in the town than on the afternoon and night of the big fight. This was largely because Kazan and the huge Dane had been placed on exhibition, each dog in a specially made cage of his own, and a fever of betting began. Three hundred men, each of whom was paying five dollars to see the battle, viewed the gladiators through the bars of their cages. Harker's dog was a combination of Great Dane and mastiff, born in the north, and bred to the traces. Betting favored him by the odds of two to one. Occasionally it ran three to one. At these odds there was plenty of Kazan money. Those who were risking their money on him were the older wilderness men—men who had spent their lives among dogs, and who knew what the red light in Kazan's eyes meant. An old Kootenay miner spoke low in another's ear:

"I'd bet on 'im even. I'd give odds if I had to. He'll fight all around the Dane. The Dane won't have no method."

"But he's got the weight," said the other dubiously. "Look at his jaws, an' his shoulders—"

"An' his big feet, an' his soft throat, an' the clumsy thickness of his belly," interrupted the Kootenay man. "For heaven's sake, man ,take my word for it, an' don't put your money on the Dane!"

Others thrust themselves between them. At first Kazan had snarled at all these faces about him. But now he lay back against the boarded side of the cage and eyed them sullenly from between his forepaws.

The fight was to be pulled off in Harker's place, a combination of saloon and cafe. The benches and tables had been cleared out and in the center of the one big room a cage ten feet square rested on a platform three and a half feet from the floor. Seats for the three hundred spectators were drawn closely around this. Suspended just above the open top of the cage were two big oil lamps with glass reflectors.

It was eight o'clock when Harker, McTrigger and two other men bore Kazan to the arena by means of the wooden bars that projected from the bottom of his cage. The big Dane was already in the fighting cage. He stood blinking his eyes in the brilliant light of the reflecting lamps. He pricked up his ears when he saw Kazan. Kazan did not show his fangs. Neither revealed the expected animosity. It was the first they had seen of each other, and a murmur of disappointment swept the ranks of the three hundred men. The Dane remained as motionless as a rock when Kazan was prodded from his own cage into the fighting cage. He did not leap or snarl. He regarded Kazan with a dubious questioning poise to his splendid head, and then looked again to the expectant and excited faces of the waiting men. For a few moments Kazan stood stiff-legged, facing the Dane. Then his shoulders dropped, and he, too, coolly faced the crowd that had expected a fight to the death. A laugh of derision swept through the closely seated rows. Catcalls, jeering, taunts flung at McTrigger and Harker, and angry voices demanding their money back mingled with a tumult of growing discontent. Sandy's face was red with mortification and rage. The blue veins in Harker's forehead had swollen twice their normal size. He shook his fist in the face of the crowd, and shouted:

"Wait! Give 'em a chance, you fools!"

At his words every voice was stilled. Kazan had turned. He was facing the Dane. The Dane had turned his eyes to Kazan. Cautiously, prepared for a lunge or a sidestep, Kazan advanced a little. The Dane's shoulders bristled. He, too, advanced upon Kazan. Four feet apart they stood rigid. One could have heard a whisper in the room now. Sandy and Harker, standing close to the cage, scarcely breathed. Splendid in every limb and muscle, warriors of a hundred fights, and fearless to the point of death, the two half-wolf victims of man stood facing each other. None could see the questioning look in their brute eyes. None knew that in this thrilling moment the unseen hand of the wonderful Spirit God of the wilderness hovered between them, and that one of its miracles was descending upon them. It was understanding. Meeting in the open—rivals in the traces—they would have been rolling in the throes of terrific battle. But here came that mute appeal of brotherhood. In the final moment, when only a step separated them, and when men expected to see the first mad lunge, the splendid Dane slowly raised his head and looked over Kazan's back through the glare of the lights. Harker trembled, and under his breath he cursed. The Dane's throat was open to Kazan. But between the beasts had passed the voiceless pledge of peace. Kazan did not leap. He turned. And shoulder to shoulder—splendid in their contempt of man—they stood and looked through the bars of their prison into the one of human faces.

A roar burst from the crowd—a roar of anger, of demand, of threat. In his rage Harker drew a revolver and leveled it at the Dane. Above the tumult of the crowd a single voice stopped him.

"Hold!" it demanded. "Hold—in the name of the law!"

For a moment there was silence. Every face turned in the direction of the voice. Two men stood on chairs behind the last row. One was Sergeant Brokaw of the Royal Northwest Mounted. It was he who had spoken. He was holding up a hand, commanding silence and attention. On the chair beside him stood another man. He was thin, with drooping shoulders, and a pale smooth face—a little man, whose physique and hollow cheeks told nothing of the years he had spent close up along the raw edge of the Arctic. It was he who spoke now, while the sergeant held up his hand. His voice was low and quiet:

"I'll give the owners five hundred dollars for those dogs," he said.

Every man in the room heard the offer. Harker looked at Sandy. For an instant their heads were close together.

"They won't fight, and they'll make good team-mates," the little man went on. "I'll give the owners five hundred dollars."

Harker raised a hand.

"Make it six," he said. "Make it six and they're yours."

The little man hesitated. Then he nodded.

"I'll give you six hundred," he agreed.

Murmurs of discontent rose throughout the crowd. Harker climbed to the edge of the platform.

"We ain't to blame because they wouldn't fight," he shouted, "but if there's any of you small enough to want your money back you can git it as you go out. The dogs 'aid down on us, that's all. We ain't to blame."

The little man was edging his way between the chairs, accompanied by the sergeant of police. With his pale face close to the sapling bars of the cage he looked at Kazan and the big Dane.

"I guess we'll be good friends," he said, and he spoke so low that only the dogs heard his voice. "It's a big price, but we'll charge it to the Smithsonian, lads. I'm going to need a couple of four-footed friends of your moral caliber."

And no one knew why Kazan and the Dane drew nearer to the little scientist's side of the cage as he pulled out a big roll of bills and counted out six hundred dollars for Harker and Sandy McTrigger.

CHAPTER XVII.

Alone in Darkness.

Never had the terror and loneliness of blindness fallen upon Gray Wolf as in the days that followed the shooting of Kazan and his capture by Sandy McTrigger. For hours after the shot she crouched in the bush back from the river, waiting for him to come to her. She had faith that he would come, as he had come a thousand times before, and she lay close on her belly, sniffing the air, and whining when it brought no scent of her mate.

Day and night were alike an endless chaos of darkness to her now, but she knew when the sun went down. She sensed the first deepening shadows of evening, and she knew that the stars were out, and that the river lay in moonlight. It was a night to roam, and after a time she moved restlessly about in a small circle on the plain, and sent out her first inquiring call for Kazan. Up from the river came the pungent odor of smoke, and instinctively she knew that it was this smoke, and the nearness of man, that was keeping Kazan from her. But she went no nearer than that first circle made by her padded feet. Blindness had taught her to wait. Since the day of the battle on the Sun Rock, when the lynx had destroyed her eyes, Kazan had never failed her. Three time she called for him in the early night. Then she made herself a nest under a banskian shrub, and waited until dawn.

Just how she knew when night blotted out the last glow of the sun, so without seeing she knew when day came. Not until she felt the warmth of the sun on her back did her anxiety overcome her caution. Slowly she moved toward the river, sniffing the air and whining. There was no longer the smell of smoke in the air, and she could not catch the scent of man. She followed her own trail back to the sand-bar, and in the fringe of thick bush overhanging the white shore of the stream she stopped and listened. After a little she scrambled down and went straight to the spot where she and Kazan were drinking when the shot came. And there her nose struck the sand still wet and thick with Kazan's blood.

She knew it was the blood of her mate, for the scent of him was all about her in the sand, mingled with the man-smell of Sandy McTrigger. She sniffed the trail of his body to the edge of the stream, where Sandy had dragged him to the canoe. She found the fallen tree to which he had been tied. And then she came upon one of the two clubs that Sandy had used to beat wounded Kazan into submissiveness. It was covered with blood and hair, and all at once Gray Wolf lay back on her haunches and turned her blind face to the sky, and there rose from her throat a cry for Kazan that drifted for miles on the wings of the south wind. Never had Gray Wolf given quite that cry before. It was not the "call" that comes with the moonlit nights, and neither was it the hunt-cry, nor the she-wolf's yearning for matehood. It carried with it the lament of death. And after that one cry Gray Wolf slunk back to the fringe of bush over the river, and lay with her face turned to the stream.

A strange terror fell upon her. She had grown accustomed to darkness, but never before had she been alone in that darkness. Always there had been the guardianship of Kazan's presence. She heard the clucking sound of a spruce hen in the bush a few yards away, and now that sound came to her as if from out of another world. A ground-mouse rustled through the grass close to her forepaws, and she snapped at it, and closed her teeth on a rock. The muscles of her shoulders twitched tremulously and she shivered as if stricken by intense cold. She was terrified by the darkness that shut out the world from her, and she pawed at her closed eyes, as if she might open them to light.

Early in the afternoon she wandered back on the plain. It was different. It frightened her, and soon she returned to the beach, and snuggled down under the tree where Kazan had lain. She was not so frightened here. The smell of Kazan was strong about her. For an hour she lay motionless, with her head resting on the club clotted with his hair and blood. Night found her still there. And when the moon and the stars came out she crawled back into the pit in the white sand that Kazan's body had made under the tree.

With dawn she went down to the edge of the stream to drink. She could not see that the day was almost as dark as night, and that the gray-black sky was a chaos of slumbering storm. But she could smell the presence of it in the thick air, and could feel the forked flashes of lightning that rolled up with the dense pall from the south and west. The distant rumbling of thunder grew louder, and she huddled herself again under the tree. For hours the storm crashed over her, and the rain fell in a deluge. When it had finished she slunk out from her shelter like a thing beaten. Vainly she sought for one last scent of Kazan. The club was washed clean. Again the sand was white where Kazan's blood had reddened it. Even under the tree there was no sign of him left.

Until now only the terror of being alone in the pit of darkness that enveloped her had oppressed Gray Wolf. With afternoon came hunger. It was this hunger that drew her from the sand-bar, and she wandered back into the plain. A dozen times she scented game, and each time it evaded her. Even a ground-mouse that she cornered under a root, and dug out with her paws, escaped her fangs.

Thirty-six hours before this Kazan and Gray Wolf had left a half of their last kill a mile or two farther back on the plain. The kill was one of the big barren rabbits, and Gray Wolf turned in its direction. She did not require sight to find it. In her was developed to its finest point that sixth sense of the animal kingdom, the sense of orientation, and as straight as a pigeon might have winged its flight she cut through the bush to the spot where they had cached the rabbit. A white fox had been there ahead of her, and she found only scattered bits of hair and fur. What the fox had left the moose birds and bush jays had carried away. Hungrily Gray Wolf turned back to the river.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Ship and Its Gender.

The word "ship" is masculine in French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese and possesses no sex in Teutonic and Scandinavian, remarks the Marine Journal.

Perhaps it would not be an error to trace the custom of feminizing ships back to the Greeks, who called them by feminine names, probably out of deference to Athene, goddess of the sea.

But the English-speaking sailor, assigns no such reasons. The ship to him is always a lady, even though she be a man-o'-war. She possesses a waist, collars, stays, laces, bonnets, ties, ribbons, chains, watches and dozens of other distinctly feminine attributes.

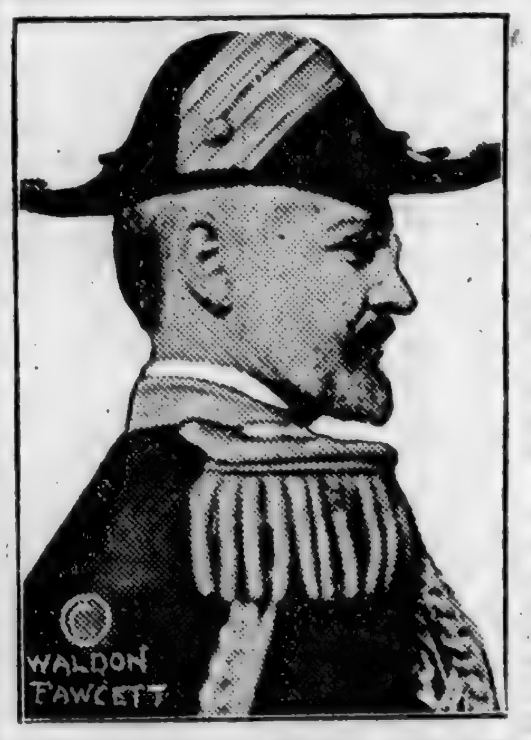
SAILOR'S RISE TO HIGH RANK



In recognition of the services rendered since he went to London to perfect arrangements for joint naval action of the war vessels of the United States, Great Britain, and France, Rear Admiral William S. Sims has been promoted to be vice admiral. The only other officer of this rank in the navy is Vice Admiral Dewitt Coffman, who is second in command of the Atlantic battleship fleet.

Vice Admiral Sims, who is the ranking American naval officer abroad, is in command of the destroyers now operating in European waters.

In the period immediately preceding the Spanish-American war, Admiral Sims, then a lieutenant, was naval attache at Paris, and was intrusted with buying ships and supplies for the navy. He spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, keeping in touch with sources of supply in Europe, and rendered valuable service. He remained an attache at Paris until 1900, when he was recalled and sent to the Asiatic station, being assigned to duty on the battleship Kentucky.

In 1902 Lieutenant Sims was ordered to the navy department and placed in charge of the office of naval practice. He remained there nearly seven years, and it was during this time that great improvement was made in the navy in gunnery, largely owing to the methods introduced by him.

SEES LATIN AMERICA AS ALLY

Speaking at a special open-air Liberty Loan mass meeting under the auspices of the churches of Baltimore, John Barrett, director of the Pan-American Union, said:

"That the whole western hemisphere will be directly engaged in the war before another year passes is now not only possible, but very probable. Speaking unofficially, for no one can speak today in this crisis for all America, but basing conclusions on the consistent attitude of the Latin-American press and the expressed opinions of Latin-American statesmen, it can be said that, despite the justifiable, and even praiseworthy, neutrality of some of the Latin-American countries, there is no question whatever that it now looks as if events would inevitably cause all of them to align themselves with the United States and is European allies.

"The preponderating public sentiment everywhere in Latin America is undoubtedly pro-American and ally. The governments remaining neutral cannot be described as being in any way under German influence. It may be that it would be far better for the eventual best interests of the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy if they would remain neutral."

COMMANDS MARINES IN FIELD

HARRIS & EWING

Col. Charles Augustus Doyen, who commands the 2,600 marines in France, as a part of the fighting division under Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing, is one of the best-known officers of the corps. He is a veteran of the Philippine campaigns, of the operations in various parts of the West Indies, and in other parts of the world. Until his designation as commander of the marine regiment which accompanied Pershing overseas, Colonel Doyen was in command of the Washington, D. C., marine barracks.

Colonel Doyen is a native of New Hampshire, and was graduated from the United States Naval academy in 1881. He is a close friend of Admiral Sims, the commander of the American forces in European waters, and during his few years at sea he and Sims were shipmates on the old corvette Swatara. Sims was then the ensign and Doyen a second lieutenant of marines. Colonel Doyen has long been considered one of the best disciplinarians in the corps. He is an expert when it comes to machine-gun warfare, and he is one of the officers who have had a prominent part in the organization of the machine-gun units of the Marine corps, which are today on a par with the best organizations in the world.

The 2,700 officers and men in France with Colonel Doyen are organized into companies of 250 men. The command is one almost entirely composed of veterans, and it is understood that among the force will be at least one company each of grenade throwers and another which will operate the trench mortars.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

NEWVILLE

Roy Abel, who was recently hurt in his feed grinder, is improving slowly.

Lewis Palmer and family were Sunday guests of John Miller and family.

Miss Fern Tarney is working for the George Hodelmyre family near Union Chapel.

Dewey Miller and Archie Cummins went to Hicksville on business Saturday evening.

A number from here attended the county eighth grade commencement at Auburn last week.

Thomas Revett, of Mich., was a Monday and Tuesday guest of Elmer Wyatt and wife.

Ruth King, Agatha Coburn, and Henry Beree were the graduates from the Newville school.

Emma Marrow and Charlie Anderson were Tuesday evening guests of John Miller and family.

Mrs. Jane Hatch returned Friday to her home near Circleville, Ohio, after a three weeks visit with Newville friends.

Mrs. Freda Vanress and little son returned home from Eort Wayne, Tuesday, after a three weeks visit with Mr. Vanress.

Mr. and Mrs. Scrouse and three children, of Auburn, were guests of Orson Retsoner and family, the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Hugh Traxler and little daughter, Mona, left Wednesday for Napoleon, Ohio, to visit the former's brother and family.

Mr. and Mrs. William Craig are the happy parents of a ten pounder boy. Mrs. Craig is improving now, but she has been seriously ill since the birth of the child.

Upwards of seventy people met at the home of Roger Tryon, Thursday evening. A good time was enjoyed, and the best part of the enjoyment were the refreshments, consisting of ice cream, cake, and candy.

A large crowd attended the flag raising in front of the U. B. church Sunday afternoon. Attorney Benninghoff and Editor Groves, of Ft. Wayne, and Attorney Stump of Auburn were the principal speakers of the day.

Captain Anderson, of Columbus, Ohio, was yresent at the flag raising ,Sunday, and made the public announcement in behalf the home volunteer boys that his Hicksville company expected to leave for service about July 15. He also caused considerable excitement when he backed his car down the river bank as the result of his breaks not working. Had there not been a tree at the water's edge in the path of the reversing car, the whole outfit, auto and five occupants, would have received showers of spray and and a healthful ducking. With the aid of a group of men, the car was elevated to the road. The damage was bad.

INSTRUCTIONS RECEIVED BY DEKALB CONSCRIPTION BOARD

The DeKalb County Conscription board Wednesday received instructions that where men have failed to register from ignorance or inattention, they are to be registered and discharged from custody and that only in those cases where the law was wilfully violated, should the men be prosecuted. Cases of wilful violation should be reported to George M. Murdock, department of justice agent at the federal building at Indianapolis.

On Sunday evening, Gerry Wasson and wife entertained the following: Walter Perkins, wife and son, Mr. and Mrs. Will Hosford of Harlan, Edd Billman and wife, Glen Steward, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wertman. Ice cream was served.

Old Settlers Reunion.

There were 283 Old Setlers in attendance at the meeting Thursday, a larger number than was anticipated. The supply of badges was exhausted before the close of the afternoon.

There were a number of the Old Settlers present Thursday who have lived in DeKalb county for 80 years or more. Henry Gunsenhouser of near Butler, has resided in the county since 1863; Mrs. Annetta H. Kennedy of Waterloo, since 1838; J. H. Murray of Spencerville, and John Wiseman of Corunna, since 1839.

Among those present at the meeting Thursday was Mrs. B. Moody, who now lives at Fort Wayne. Mrs. Moody was the first white child born in DeKalb county.

To be termed as an Old Settler one must live in the county continuously for forty years. The following is a list of those registering at the meeting at Eckhart park Thursday:

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

NOT just to have one, not merely for the purpose of saying that she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and undivided attention to any such accounts.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 343 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland [illegible] Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

CAN SURPLUS FOOD BUT USE JARS AND CANS WISELY

Don't have an empty preserving jar in your home next fall.

There may be some difficulty in securing cans and preserving jars.

Reserve regular tight-sealing containers for vegetables, concentrated soups, meats, and fish.

Concentrate products so that each jar or can will hold as much food and as little water as possible.

Put up jams, jellies, and preserves in glasses sealed with cork or paper and paraffin. Pack fruit juices in ordinary bottles.

Don't can anything that can be kept just as well dried or in other forms. Dry navy and mature Lima beans for winter use.

Produce in your garden lots of cabbage, potatoes, and root crops that can be kept for the winter without canning.—U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Little Ones Enjoy Day

Children's day was observed at the Lutheran church Sunday morning, and the day was turned over to the little ones, who enjoyed their part in the program as well as their elders, who listened to it. The exercises were fine. The collection amounted to $12.77. Communion services followed. At this time, a collection was taken for the orphan home at Springfield, Ohio, at which $23.80 was raised. The attendance at Sunday school was 166.

Recovery Hopeless

Robert Sherman, aged about 30, in charge of the concessions at the Ginnivan show, was taken to the Lutheran hospital, Fort Wayne, on Monday forenoon. At that time, he had badly inflammed cheek, and blood poison was threatened. This developed on Sunday. Wednesday, a telephone message announced that the young man's case had suddenly taken a change for the worse and his recovery was doubtful. Members of the troupe hastened to the young man's bedstead.

BEAN LEAF BEETLE CAUSING DAMAGE IN INDIANA

Reports reaching the office of the state entomologist, at Indianapolis, Frank N. Wallace, declare that the bean leaf beetle is causing a great deal of damage in Indiana now. The insects eat large holes in the leaves of beans and other such plants. They are about one-fifth of an inch in length and are yellowish green with four dark spots on the wing covers. The larvae feed on the roots and main stem of the plant, thus doing double damage.

"Arsenate of lead should be sprayed on all bean patches as soon as any damage is noticed to plants," Wallace said Wednesday. "One ounce of powdered arsenate of lead to two and one-half gallons of water sprayed on the plants will usually control this pest. 'If Bordeaux mixture is mixed with the arsenate of lead, better results are obtained and this will protect the plants from disease and kill any other insects feeding upon them."

EDUCATORS OF THE STATE ORGANIZED

Important Branch of the Council of Defense Is Selected for Service.

SCOPE OF BODY'S ACTIVITIES

Will Seek by Every Means Possible to Train Men and Women, Boys and Girls in Efficient Methods of Living and Working.

Indianapolis.—The state council of defense has made public the educational section, which will serve hereafter as an arm of the state defense. The membership follows:

Horace Ellis, chairman, state superintendent of public instruction; J. G. Collicott, vice chairman, deputy state superintendent of public instruction; J. J. Pettijohn, secretary, professor at Indiana university, Bloomington; L. P. Benezet, superintendent of city schools, Evansville; Mrs. E. A. Blaker, principal of Teachers' college, Indianapolis; F. W. Bogardus, professor at the State Normal, Terre Haute; W. L. Bryan, president of Indiana university; Lee Driver, superintendent of schools, Randolph county; Donald DuShane, superintendent of city schools, Clinton; T. F. Fitbziggon, superintendent of city schools, Columbus; J. W. Laird, president of Central Normal college, Danville; George L. Mackintosh, president of Wabash college, Crawfordsville; E. O. Maple, superintendent of city schools, Vincennes; T. T. Martin, superintendent of schools, Hendricks county; W. A. Millis, president of Hanover college, Hanover; B. F. Moore, superintendent of city schools, Muncie; Richard Park, superintendent of schools, Sullivan county; W. W. Parsons, president of the Indiana State Normal school, Terre Haute; Frank Pickell, principal of the high school, Richmond; O. M. Pittinger, superintendent of city schools, Frankfort; G. L. Roberts, professor at Purdue university, Lafayette; Lyle Shank, superintendent of schools, Steuben county; W. E. Stone, president of Purdue university, Lafayette; Miss Anna Willson, principal high school, Crawfordsville.

In a Supervisory Capacity.

Mr. Ellis will have associated with him, in a general supervisory capacity in this work, President Bryan of Indiana university, President Stone of Purdue, President Mackintosh of Wabash, and President Parsons of the State Normal.

In directing the mobilization of the city school forces of the state, the following superintendents promise great activity:

Fitzgibbons of Columbus, Benezet of Evansville, Maple of Vincennes, Moore of Muncie, DuShane of Clinton, and Pittenger of Frankfort.

The county school executives who have consented to take a leading part in the work of the educational section are the following:

Shank of Steuben, Martin of Hendricks, Driver of Randolph, and Park of Sullivan.

State's Special Schools.

The special schools of the state are represented in the section's activity by President Laird of the Central Normal college, Mrs. Blaker of the Teachers' college, and President Millis of Hanover.

Tells Scope and Purpose.

The state committee on educational mobilization for the war, in answer to inquiries about the plans for organizing committees or councils of school officials in every county in the state, has sent out a statement explaining the scope and purpose of the organization. The statement, authorized by J. G. Collicott, the chairman of the state committee, says:

"The organization of school men is primarily for the purpose of putting effect some of the numerous suggestions for war service by teachers and pupils and to secure uniformity of action where important principles are involved.

"The program of activities to be followed by schools during the war has been carefully prepared by the state committee and seeks to classify the various kinds of war service work so that undue emphasis may not be given to some things at the expense of others. The program calls for surveys of school resources; these surveys can be made only by school officials organized for the specific purpose. The program devotes much attention to the problem of utilizing the schools for increasing food production and conservation, but gives equally important place to other lines of school activity for war purposes, such as clothing production, vocational training, the teaching of thrift, extension work, health conservation, constructive patriotism.

Matter of School Credits.

"In such matters as the giving of school credit to pupils and students for farm and garden work or for military service, it is important that school officials and teachers have a local organization to consider the local problems and to keep in touch with the state committee in order to avoid confusion. It is important that school laws governing attendance and delinquency and child labor laws remain in force, that modifications, if found necessary, be made only after thorough consideration by schoolmen of each locality.

Medical Section of Defense Body.

The formation of the medical section of the state council of defense was announced by Will H. Hays, chairman of the council. The personnel of the medical section is as follows:

Dr. Charles P. Emerson, Indianapolis, chairman; Dr. John H. Oliver, Indianapolis, associate chairman; Dr. Miles F. Porter, Fort Wayne; Dr. Edwin Walker, Evansville; William Fortune, Indianapolis, president Indianapolis Red Cross; Dr. J. Rilus Eastman, enlistment of physicians; Dr. E. O. Holloway, Knightstown, conservation of medical practice among the civil population; Dr. Alfred Henry, Indianapolis, tuberculosis; Dr. William N. Wishard, Indianapolis, and Dr. William P. Garshwiler, Southport, venereal diseases; Dr. S. E. Smith, East Haven, mental and nervous diseases; J. K. Lilly, Indianapolis, medicines, biological preparations and all pharmaceutical supplies; W. D. Allison, Indianapolis, hospital equipment; Dr. C. S. Woods, Indianapolis, hospital accommodation; Miss Edith G. Willis, Vincennes, president Indiana State Nurses' association; Miss Edna Humphrey, Crawfordsville, secretary of the Indiana board of registration and examination of nurses; Miss Edna G. Henry, Indianapolis, care of dependent families.

Want Lower Heat Unit.

Asking that the public service commission make an order reducing the heat standard for artificial gas in this state from 600 British thermal units to 550, the Indiana Gas association, representing all of the gas companies in the state, has filed a petition with the commission. If it is granted the "calorific standard" of gas will be reduced. In other words, gas would not then supply as much heat as is now required under the present standard.

S. E. Mulholland, C. H. Chubb and J. D. Forrest are the members of the committee that filed the petition for the organization. The plea covers the 29 artificial gas companies operating in Indiana towns and cities.

It is set forth that on account of the scarcity of gas-making materials, it is practically impossible for Indiana companies to produce gas which will come up to the heat unit stndard of 600 British thermal units, "even in those cases where this standard has been reasonably well maintained in the past, and regardless of the exceptional high cost of such materials."

It is declared that many of the gas companies throughout the state have found it impossible to maintain this standard, although they have made an honest effort to do so.

Chairmen Named by Defense Council.

The state council of defense met at the statehouse and the list of chairmen of committees, to handle all phases of the work of the council, was made public as follows:

Public Policy—C. W. Fairbanks.

Advisory Committee—Thomas Taggart.

The chairmen of each committee later on will select others to work on these committees.

Variation in Railroad Taxation.

Another spoke in the wheel of unequal and discriminatory taxing of public property in Indiana was revealed by the public service commission of Indiana, through Carl H. Mote, its secretary. Mr. Mote has just completed an exhaustive summary of the percentage of gross revenues that the Indiana railways pay in taxes. The percentage varies from 2.07 per cent, in the case of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway company, of Indiana, to 25.3 per cent, in the case of the Chicago & Wabash Valley Railway company. Rumors also are afloat that recent valuations of some corporate property by the state board of tax commissioners has been of similar character as to inequalities and action to relieve these conditions may be taken, it is said.

Social Service Bureau.

Miss Laurel C. Thayer has been appointed executive secretary of the home department of the Indianapolis war recreational-social service bureau. She took charge of the headquarters of the home department in the Y. W. C. A. building and will be there every day from nine until five o'clock, to assist visiting women and to answer questions in regard to the entertainment of soldiers and visitors.

The register of all the men in the officers' reserve corps at Fort Benjamin Harrison has been completed.

Remarkable photograph showing the loading of one of the gigantic French guns on the French front. A close-up view of the shell and gun mechanism is shown. This monster projectile is about to be rolled into the breach, the lock slammed and turned, and the messenger of destruction sent hurtling through the air to spread death in the German lines. This gun is one of the most powerful used by the French.

Church Is Home for Cats.

The sacristy in the church of San Lorenzo in Florence, built by Michael Angelo in 1523 as a mausoleum for the Medici family, adjoins a cloister that is almost entirely devoted to cats. It contains square light arches leaping from column to column, with the customary campanile towering far above it inhabited by pure white doves. Between the columns of the cloister is a parapet and beyond it a moat four to five feet in depth. And this moat, backed by all the columns and the parapet surrounds a kind of island terrace, quite out of reach of everybody. That island is the kingdom of cats, as many as choose to colonize there and as is usually the case with cats, their name is legion. They are fed regularly through the charity of someone who long ago left a legacy for their maintenance.

WILL PROHIBIT HOT BREAD.

In the course of the debate on the bone-dry bill in the Georgia senate State Senator Pickett asked this question: "Will you say to the people next that they won't be allowed to make hot bread because it hurts their digestion?" The Atlanta Constitution made reply in words which constitute a comprehensive indictment of the liquor traffic. "Yes, Senator Pickett," it said, "when the use of hot bread becomes so general and so abnormal as to constitute a mania; when craving for it becomes so great that men neglect their firesides and starve their wives and children in order to satisfy their appetites for it; when it is proved that men fill up on hot bread and go home and beat their wives and children in hot-bread frenzy; when ruffians nerve themselves with hot bread and under its influence kill our citizens and desecrate our homes; when hot bread violates the sanctity of our firesides and debases and debauches our young sons and pure-minded daughters; when it leagues itself with and inspires the lowest and vilest sorts of vice; when it befuddles the brains of our boys so that under its spells they sign checks and forge names and go to the penitentiary; when craving for it becomes so irresistible that workmen on Saturday nights cannot pass a bakery on the road home, but go in and squander the week's earnings in hot bread, when it should have been spent in coal, food for the family, shoes, life insurance; when society is taxed to provide policemen to guard men and women under the influence of hot bread; when the city and state are burdened to support courts to deal with crime committed as a direct result of over-indulgence in hot bread; when our penitentiaries and almhouses and insane asylums become filled with criminals and human derelicts and maniacs—human beings, once with souls, wrecked upon the rocks of hot bread; when mother's hairs are whitened by work through sleepless nights that fathers and sons spend carousing in hot bread dives; when men can no longer find employment on a railroad or in an industrial pursuit if he uses hot bread; when engineers under the influence of hot bread fail to see the signal lights and wreck their trains and slaughter innocent people; when chauffeurs fill up on hot bread and drive their cars like madmen over our highways and streets, running down our women and children, the aged and the cripples, and killing them; when the use of hot bread shall reach such a pass that it threatens the very safety and sanity and life of the state—then, the patriotic, decency-loving people will demand that hot bread be prohibited.

PROHIBITION AND WAGES.

From the United States census report:

In ten years in prohibition states wages increased 103 per cent.

In near-prohibition states, states in which 50 per cent or more of the population was under prohibition, the increase was 77 per cent.

In partially licensed states, states in which more than 25 per cent but less than 50 per cent of the population was under prohibition, the increase was 75 per cent.

IN LICENSED STATES IN WHICH LESS THAN 25 PER CENT OF THE POPULATION WAS UNDER PROHIBITION, THE INCREASE IN WAGES WAS BUT 61 PER CENT.

WHICH IS BETTER FRIEND TO LABOR, LICENSE OR PROHIBITION?

ALCOHOL IS ALCOHOL.

The alcohol of beer and the alcohol of whisky are identical. Whisky drinking is dangerous because of the alcohol poison which the whisky contains. Beer drinking is dangerous for the same reason. Medical men are, however, pretty well agreed that, on the whole, apart from the alcoholic poisoning, beer drinking is more mischievous than whisky drinking.

DOOMED TO DESTRUCTION.

There is no agency on earth or in hell strong enough to deliver the liquor institution from its just doom. The only power that could strike the fast descending sword of retribution from the avenging hand of this republic is the power of Almighty God. That power is on the other side!—Daniel A. Poling.

POORER ALL AROUND.

"It isn't the saloon that makes a man miserable—it's his poverty," the exponent of the saloon is telling the workingman. This is often true. But you never heard of a saloon that relieved a workingman of his poverty. Every time he comes out of a saloon he is poorer than when he went in.

A LIQUOR FABRICATION.

WAYS OF SUMMER BOARDERS

They Are Usually Very Witty Persons Who Make Comical Remarks to the Farmer.

Summer boarders are people who spend several weeks in the country each summer longing for a trip home. They are usually very witty persons and make comical remarks to the farmer. Aside from the board they pay him the farmer cleans up a tidy sum each summer sending the things his boarders say to the comic weeklies. A summer boarder can merely look at a cow and quick as a wink he will say something funny. The farmer puts this down in a book he always carries around with him. In the course of a couple of weeks he has several pages of good jokes to sell at his own rates, says the Philadelphia Star.

If you board with a farmer this summer say some funny things to him about the cows or the pigs. If he keeps a horse always poke fun at his horse. He will laugh at the funny things you say. Then he will go in and open up a can of fresh country peas out of his own cellar so that when you go back to the city you will miss the country vegetables. When you leave be sure and tell him how you enjoyed the country eating so that he can laugh some more.

What would be the result if we always followed the advice we give to others?

SPLIT-BAMBOO BAIT-CASTING ROD

My Dear Buck:

Without a doubt, old-timer, the one-piece rod is the ideal bait caster, but when it comes to toting it around, it is the unhandiest article one could find in a year's travel. You simply cannot tote it along on a trip without the haunting fear that someone will assist you to break it, but once on the water with a little old one-piece split bamboo rod, it shows up like four-of-a-kind after a lean run. For the permanent fishing camp or the chap that is lucky enough to live right close to good fishing waters, there is no better rod than the one-piece.

For the two-piece rod there is but one style of construction that should be considered, and that is the short butt and long tip. A rod of this kind comes the nearest to having the same amount of action and strength as the one-piece rod as the ferrule is set well down below the center, allowing the strain to be distributed equally and giving the bamboo a chance to spring without being stiffened by a ferrule, and the action killed. This short butt, long-tip construction gives you a snappy rod that shoots out the cast without unnecessary strain on the wrists and arm. In selecting a rod of two-piece construction, side-step the rod with the ferrule directly in the middle, the point of greatest strain in landing a fish.

Three-Piece Handy to Carry.

The main thing in favor of the three-piece rod is the fact that you can stick it in a suitcase and carry it without any bother. Every place you put a ferrule on a rod kills that much more resiliency in the bamboo. The ferrule is unbendable and at that point comes the break when the load on the bamboo is too severe, this is a hundred to one shot and you can play it clean across the board and never take a chance on your money. Although serrated ferrules are used in the more expensive rods, they cannot eliminate the severe strain which generally causes the rod to break either right above or below the ferrule. Even at that, the three-piece rod is stronger than the two-piece rod when the ferrule on the latter is in the middle.

Early in the bait-casting game the rods were generally made either four or four and a half feet in length, but as the sport grew in popularity, they stretched them up to six and a half feet, making all stops between. It is a matter of personal choice as to length, probably the most popular size being the five footer. This makes a rod that has a good swing to it and still carries enough backbone to hold the big ones, and at the same time is long enough to give fine play in landing the fish. For overhead casting while sitting in a boat, the five-footer makes an ideal size, and is about right for distance casts. Split-bamboo rods average about an ounce to the foot, and at that rate a five-footer would only tax your wrists to the tune of five ounces, which isn't such a great old load to toss around during the day's fishing.

Fittings for the Rod.

The fittings of the rod are an important feature—they not only add to the life of the rod but also if of the right kind, add to casting qualities, and every little help to lessen the effort and work of casting makes quite a difference in a few hours' fishing. The ferrules should be of German silver—they are stronger and better made than the brass ferrules which are generally nickel-plated, and many a defect can be hidden under a coating of nickel.

The selection of the hand grip, as to style, lies between the single and the double grip. After a day's casting with the double grip you will wonder how you ever got along without it. It is far more comfortable to fish with, the upper grip giving you a firmer and easier hold on the rod in reeling in the line, and at the same time eliminating the cramped position of the left hand. If you have never used the double grip, old man, treat yourself to a good thing and select that style in your next rod. In the way of material, the solid cork grip, which is really made of a series of cork washers, makes the finest grip in the game and it sure has a soft feel to the hand.

Of course you will want a locking reel seat, the majority of rods have them anyway and who wants to throw his reel into the drink right at the time when he has a chance to hook the big one. Finger-pulls are going a little into the discard, but it is no disgrace to have one on your rod, and at that it assists the short-fingered caster to maintain better control over his casts. If you feel that you will have better control over your rod with the finger pull, get it—you're the fellow to suit, not the innocent bystander.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 1

ISAIAH'S CALL TO HEROIC SERVICE.

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 6

GOLDEN TEXT—Also I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.—Isa. 6:8.

The lesson committee now turn for a third quarter's lesson to a series of studies in the Old Testament as found in II Kings, Ezra and Nehemiah. As an introduction, they have chosen this chapter in the book of Isaiah.

Isaiah prophesied in the latter half of Uzziah's reign, B. C. 760 and down to the early years of the reign of Manasseh about B. C. 694 (ch. 1:1). This event took place probably B. C. 755. The place was Jerusalem; the kingdom of Israel was still in existence (for 33 years longer) being utterly destroyed in B. C. 721. The name Isaiah means "the salvation of Jehovah;" his wife is called "the prophetess;" two of his sons are named and his social position was high, as shown by his intimacy with kings. Isaiah lived in troublous times. He was a reformer seeking to rescue his nation from the sins growing out of their disobedience to God. He was the leading statesman of his time, the greatest of the prophets, an author, a heroic, single-minded, patriotic, fearless, undaunted man of great personal power and influence. He was a prophet of hope; he wrote out of his long life of faithfulness and fellowship with God. The book of Isaiah falls into two great divisions; chapters 1-39 being chiefly historical, interspersed with songs and poems; chapters 40-66 are a collection of prophecies that have to do chiefly with the return from the Babylonian exile and the days of future glory for the kingdom of God.

I. Visions (vv. 1-4). As we have said, Isaiah prophesied in a time of great need. The prophet was very much discouraged. In this passage he locates his vision at a special time and place (ch. 1:1). Every man's great need today is a real vision of God. We are not so much in need of theories about God, as a vision of God himself. Uzziah's long reign of 52 years, in which the kingdom prospered and the king's name was spread abroad, stopped as suddenly as an earthquake, and his glory was eclipsed (see II Chron. 26:16-19). The place in which Isaiah saw his vision was the house of God. Perhaps not in the temple, but seeing the vision from the temple the prophet looks to a house not built with hands, Jehovah's own heavenly palace. Therein he saw "the Lord sitting on a throne . . . and his train filled the temple." Above it, or around it, were arranged hovering couriers and the seraphic choir. The majesty of this vision is indicated in verse two, its glory in verse three, and its power is indicated in verse four. The whole earth was filled with God's wondrous wisdom, love and power. Literally "the whole earth is full of his glory." The Hebrew word for holiness comes from a word meaning "to set apart—set a distance from." The holy Lord is not only sinless but he is sublime and absolute also. It may seem difficult to harmonize Isaiah's vision with John 1:18, yet these manifestations were one and the same, for all that saw Jesus saw God (John 14:9). King Uzziah was dead but the real king was living still, high and lifted up. The attempt to reason about him, what he must be and what he must not be, as if he were one of ourselves (Eph. 1:20, 21) is absurd.

II. Divisions (vv. 5-13). (1) The vision of the prophet (vv. 5-7). This vision brought conviction because it showed how far separated from God the prophet was. It also brought conversion in that he acknowledged himself to be unclean, himself and his surroundings to be vile. It also led to cleansing, for the king heard the voice of the prophet, removed his guilt and purged his sin. (2) The voice and proclamation from the king (vv. 8-13). The king called for a messenger (v. 8) and at once the prophet is found. Someone has said that "a task without a vision is drudgery; a vision without a task is a dream; while a task linked to a vision will move the world." Not only did the king ask for a messenger, but he gave the message which the messenger was to utter (vv. 9-12). The message was to be to his own people; it was not to be a pleasant one. Verse 13 shows us this message in prophecy. Isaiah ought to fully proclaim the truth, but the people would not understand it, and the whole effect of his proclamation would be to harden them.

The Application.

What is your application of this vision for Isaiah? We are a Christian nation, but there are many degrees and kinds of Christians; those who sincerely try to follow Jesus; those who live under a Christian government, and are unaffected by Christian influences. There is only one way to save this nation from going the way of Nineveh and Tyre; that is, that justice and righteousness shall govern, and that justice and righteousness shall be the fruit of regenerated lives. The cry is for a better social environment and a more just social position.

ANY CORN LIFTS OUT, DOESN'T HURT A BIT!

No foolishness! Lift your corns and calluses off with fingers—It's like magic!

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn, can harmlessly be lifted right out with the fingers if you apply upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

For little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain.

This simple drug dries the moment it is applied and does not even irritate the surrounding skin while applying it or afterwards.

This announcement will interest many of our readers. If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to surely get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

HE PLANTED "RARE FLOWER"

Amateur Gardener Discovered That the Brassica Campestri Was Known to Others as Turnips.

"I am a victim of the 'every-man-his-own gardener,'" said the North Alabama street man. "In my back yard in a space no larger than a tablecloth, I have planted seeds of a dozen kinds of vegetables and will soon be entirely independent of the greengrocer. If the city ordinance were not adverse to practical economy I should finish the meat dealer by keeping a couple of shoats.

"While I was putting in my garden a friend of mine came by and asked why I did not put in something to beautify the front yard. 'Here,' he said, 'are some seeds of the brasica campestris. When these come up you'll have something.'

"'What colored flower has it?' I asked.

"'Yellow,' was the answer.

"So I planted the seeds and they came up promptly.

"A neighbor passing by asked what I had in the bed. I had written the name brassica campestris in my notebook, and spelled it out to him. I told him it was a rare flower with a beautiful yellow blossom.

"'All right,' he said. 'I have some. We call 'em turnips.'

"My kind friend has gone on a trip. When he gets back there'll be something doing."—Indianapolis News.

How Animals Feed.

The squirrel carries it food in its mouth by means of its paws, while the elephant uses its trunk. The giraffe, anteater and toad employ their tongues, but spiders masticate their food with horny jaws.

The caterpillar is provided with saw-edged jaws, and uses them so well that every day he consumes at last three times his own weight in food. Toads, turtles and tortoises do not possess teeth.

Frogs have only an upper row of teeth, and lobsters and crabs have a set of teeth in their stomachs. The tiger and lion do not grind their food; as a matter of fact, their teeth only work with an up-and-down movement, much like chopping knives.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Wouldn't Have Him.

"Very handsome typewriter you've hired," commented his aristocratic sister.

"Um."

"I s'pose she'll be marrying you for you money, next."

"No danger, sis. She knows too much about the business."

No Quarter for Him.

Mrs. Jones was standing in the doorway talking with old Mr. Ham, a neighbor. They were speaking in uncomplimentary terms about an impostor who had lately passed through the village, swindling right and left.

"He'd better not come around here again!" exclaimed Mrs. Jones indignantly. "If he does, I'll give him no quarter."

"Quarter!" shouted the enraged old man; "quarter! Well, I guess not! I wouldn't give him ten cents!"—Youth's Companion.

Too Sick To Work

Many Women in this Condition Regain Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Convincing Proof of This Fact.

Ridgway, Penn. — "I suffered from female trouble with backache and pain in my side for over seven months so I could not do any of my work. I was treated by three different doctors and was getting discouraged when my sister-in-law told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her. I decided to try it, and it restored my health, so I now do all of my housework which is not light as I have a little boy three years old." —Mrs. O. M. Rhines, Ridgway, Penn.

Mrs. Lindsey Now Keeps House For Seven.

Tennille, Ga.—"I want to tell you how much I have been benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About eight years ago I got in such a low state of health I was unable to keep house for three in the family. I had dull, tired, dizzy feelings, cold feet and hands nearly all the time and could scarcely sleep at all. The doctor said I had a severe case of ulceration and without an operation I would always be an invalid, but I told him I wanted to wait awhile. Our druggist advised my husband to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has entirely cured me. Now I keep house for seven and work in the garden some, too. I am so thankful I got this medicine. I feel as though it saved my life and have recommended it to others and they have been benefited".—Mrs. W. E. Lindsey, R. R. 3, Tennille, Ga.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Meeting of Civic League

How many understand the constitution of the state of Indiana? Hands up, all that do.

Aha! just as we expected! Not one person in a dozen.

Did you notice that the News man was among those who did not hold up his hand?

The constitution is little understood. Now, in view of the fact that the question of a new organic law is being considered, would it not be well to post up?

The Civic League, an organization of St. Joe people, has for its object the study of the present constitution and the discussion of its provisions, with a view to intelligent voting when the new one comes up for rejection or ratification. The next meeting will be held at the M. P. church on Friday evening of this week.

The first seven sections of the present constitution will be considered. These guarantee religious freedom. The subject has been assigned to Rev. A. K. Mumma, and the general discussion will be led by H. M Widney. There will be music and other interesting features, including a recitation, "Who Gave You the Name of Old Glory?" by Mrs. Lena Meek.

There is no membership fee and everyone who attends is at liberty to take part. The first meeting, held at the Christian church, was well worth attending; and the com- will be even more interesting.

INDIANA LIQUOR DEALERS WINCE UNDER FEDERAL TAX

Must Pay for a Full Year Dating July 1, Although Prohibition Law in State Becomes Effective on April 2, 1918.

Retail and wholesale liquor dealers, as well as brewers and distillers doing business in Indiana, are rapidly coming to the conclusion that life for them within the confines of Hoosierdoom is hardly worth living nowadays.

The annual Federal tax for brewers, distillers and all persons and organizations handling liquor is due July 1. Persons who have come to the offices of Peter J. Kruyer, collector of internal revenue for the Sixth District, comprising fifty-nine Indiana counties, are inquiring if they can pay the tax for the nine months from July 1 until April 2, 1918, when the state becomes "dry" under the Prohibition law passed at the last session of the legislature.

The inquirers are told by Mr. Kruyer and his assistants that the tax for the entire year from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1918, must be paid by all the dealers and manufacturers who wish to deal in or manufacture liquor until the time that the prohibition law becomes effective. Mr. Kruyer pointed out yesterday that the government permits no rebates on special tax payments and that a man would have to pay his tax for the entire year if he did not intend to sell or make liquors for a longer period than one day after July 1.

He declared that the question of rebates on the tax had been decided on many occasions when the local dealers have sought a refund. Approximately [illegible] 000 government liquor licenses are taken out in the sixth district of the revenue department each year.

Retail liquor dealers, including saloonkeepers, druggists and clubs, are taxed $25, brewers are taxed $50 and $100 according to capacity; and distillers are taxed $100 and $200, according to capacity.

Mr. Kruyer asserts that many druggists have intimated that they will handle only denatured alcohol and grain alcohol for medicinal purposes after July 1. It was suggested that this plan might cut down the number of government licenses.

Manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine and adulterated butter, manufacturers of and dealers in filled cheese, manufacturers of stills, brokers, pawnbrokers, proprietors of amusement and concert halls, museums and baseball parks, proprietors of bowling alleys, billiard rooms and circuses and manufacturers of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco products, must pay their taxes for the fiscal year not later than July 1.

Under the new revenue law, Mr. Kruyer pointed out that taxes must be paid now on pool and billiard tables and bowling alleys in clubs. These formerly were exempt from taxation.

To Repeat the Play

The play, "The School Ma'am," will be given at the opera house on the evening of July 4. There is no use telling the people of St. Joe that it is good. That was settled when it was given last winter. The proceeds are for a good cause—the public drinking fountain. Following is the cast of characters:

Kate Bell, the school ma'am, Mrs. Flossie Mavis.
Mrs. Grump, the complaining parent, Mrs. Cora Price.
Mrs. Undertow, Mrs. Belle Barney.
Marly Undertow, Mrs. Esther Bowman.
Minnie Trueblood, Mrs. Lena Meek.
Undertow, the self made man, Ray D. Herrick.
Trueblood, C. A. Patterson.
Cypher, a friend of education, Sam Mumaw.
Johnie Gump, the little son, Merritt Sechler.
Milt. Harmon, Merritt Maxwell.
Jamie McWhack, the janitor, Ralph Sechler.

There will be specialties between acts by a mixed chorus, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. William Stamen.

Work of Ernest Sellers

Ernest Orlando Sellers, one who writes notes on the "International Sunday School Lesson" for THE NEWS is a native of Michigan. Soon after his graduation from high school he was apprenticed as a civil engineer, and later was elected city engineer and superintendent of the public works at Lansing, Mich., in the office where he had been trained. He was at one time vice-president of the Michigan engineering society.

All his life Mr. Sellers has been active in church work, and thus the step from a professional life to one devoted to Christian labor was a natural and easy one. After a brief time spent as a student at the Moody Bible institute of Chicago, Mr. Sellers began the work which has made his name widly known throughout the country. As a Y. M. C. A. secretrary he filled positions in Macan, Ga., Washington, D. C., and Wilmington, Del.

In evangelistic work he has been associated with Fred B. Smith, Dr. R. A. Torrey. and others. As a church bsotherhood secretary he led a work in Cleveland, Ohio, that enrolled upwards of 600 men, organized and conducted a May festival chorus of 1'200 members, and a large Sunday school teachers' training class.

For the past reveral pears Mr. Sellers has been a member of the fasulty of the Moody Bible institute. He is director of the evening classes which enroll more than 500 students each year, and is director of the Sunday school course, which he planned and which is broadly comprehensive, abreast of the latest and best in Sunday school work, and at the same time true to Christianity and the fundamental principles and concepts of the Sunday school. Mr. Sellers is superintendent of one of the prominent Sunday schools of Chicago, and teacher of the largest adult Bible class in Illinois, it being connected with the Moody church Sunday school,

The many readers of THE NEWS who study the lesson as we print it each week will, we know, be pleased to have the above information about the man who prepares it for us.

FAIRFIELD FAVORS ACT

REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE TWELFTH DISTRICT MAKES STRONG ADDRESS IN HOUSE FAVORING FOOD AND FUEL CONTROL

Local Representative Says That We Face a Great Danger Unless Something is Done to Curb the Speculators in Food Supplies.

Washngton, D. C., June 21.—One of the principal speeches in the house Wednesday on the food control bill was made by Representative Fairfield, of the Twelfth Indiana district. He said he had no hesitancy in supporting the bill.

"We have had recently in Indiana an investigation of coal operations," he said. "Some time prior to that a gentleman who is at the head of large business interests wrote to me and said, 'I tell you that the situation in our town of only 4,000 people is becoming dangerous.'

"Hitherto the people of the middle west, in the northern part, have been able to go to the forests and get their fuel, but the towns and cities and even the villages in these country districts now depend absolutely on coal to keep them warm in winter. This letter came from no alarmist. It came from no man who was in the habit of complaining. whose attitude of mind was unfriendly to business.

Town Without Coal.

"Another letter came from my own town, saying that that town in the middle of summer was out of coal; that it could be secured only by paying two and three times the price that was charged only a year ago. So the matter was taken up by the governor of the state and investigated.

"The coal men took a lofty, independent attitude with regard to it, but it was discovered on investigation that not only 100 per cent but 200 per cent and 300 per cent and 400 per cent had been charged for the delivery of coal. Not only that, but the local dealers, gripped by those who were producing it, would make no contracts.

"We face danger in this country, Mr. Chairman, unless there is some control over fuel. In the centers of population we face danger unless there is something done with regard to food control. No man believes that this bill is perfect. It is said to be a war measure, but, gentlemen, some legislation drastic in character would have had to come, peace or war, for those who have controlled our fuel and food, willing selfishly to let people freeze and starve, crushed under their economic power.

Farmer Writes Letter.

"Talk about a dictatorship, talk about dangers to freedom. Already too long have we permitted men almost to crush out the poor in the great cities. Then, too, a letter came from a farmer to me which treats the essential difficulty of the legislation. He told me in this letter that in 1915 he planted forty acres and reaped nothing; that in 1916 he planted forty acres of wheat and reaped a half crop, about 400 bushels; and now he says; 'My crop bids fair to be a good one, and what is a fair price to me under these circumstances?'

"I recognize the essential difficulty involved in this legislation, but I want to call your attention to this fact, that this legislation is framed in a right attitude of mind. The men who are responsible for the bill are honest and earnest in their desire to do for the county what ought to be done. I want to say to you that the American people when they have set themselves to the solution of a problem have never been discouraged.

Speaks of Efficiency.

"We hear much talk of efficiency in this day and no doubt the German government has been very efficient in its organization, but we have in this country subdued a continent. We have organized a government, we have seen the evolution of a nation that is general and not specific. But, men, when you want to think of the efficiency of our people do it by concrete illustrative example. The German empire has 268,000 square miles of territory and into that territory the people have crowded all their thought power, all their mind power, all their money power, and they have wrought wonderfully.

"Ah, men, no people on the face of the earth have ever wrought as we have wrought in the subduing and development of this continent. And I am not afraid that a people like that, earnestly and honestly desirous of solving this problem, will fail. This bill undertakes to control food and fuel. It did include clothing, boots and shoes, and I was very glad this afternoon to have it explained why they were eliminated at this particular time, but, men, this legislation is a warning to godless men and unprincipled men that if need be we shall go further, if they will not take the warning in the control of these essentials of fuel and food.

"After all, government finally in its efficiency depends on who is to execute it. Those in power have asked that we give them this responsibility. It is up to them to make good, and it is up to us to see that every safeguard is thrown round the bill that will make it possible for them to do the work efficiently and with the least possible criticism."
